GEN. M'CLELLAN'S ADDRESS TO HIS SOLDIERS.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, CAMP NEAR HARRISON'S LANDING, July 4, 1862.

SOLDIERS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC! Your achievements of the last ten days have illustrated the valor and endurance of the American soldier attacked by superior forces and without hope of reinforcements. You have succeeded in changing your base of operations by a flank movement, always regarded as the most hazardous of military expedients. You have saved all your material, all your trains and all your guns except a few lost in battle, taking in return guns and colors from the enemy. Upon your march you have been assailed day after day, with desperate fury, by men of the same race and nation, skillfully massed and led. Under every disadvantage of number, and necessarily of position, also, you have, in every conflict, beaten back your foes with enormous slaughter. Your conduct ranks you among the celebrated armies of history. No one will now question that each of you may always, with pride, say, "I belong to the army of the Potomac."

You have reached the new base, complete in organization and unimpaired in spirit. The enemy may at any time attack you. We are prepared to meet them. I have personally established your lines. Let them come, and we will convert their repulse into a final defeat.

Your Government is strengthening you with the resources of a great people. On this, our Nation's birthday, we declare to our foes, who are rebels against the best interests of mankind, that this army shall enter the Capital of the so-called Confederacy; that our National Constitution shall prevail, and that the Union, which can alone insure internal peace and external security to each State, "must and shall be preserved," cost what it may in time, treasure and blood. (Signed) GEO. B. McCLELLAN.

GEN. McCLELLAN'S DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, July 5.

Dispatches have been received from Gen. McCLELLAN dated as late as 1 o'clock P. M., Friday, July 4.

The following is their substance, omitting military details and operations not proper for present publication. There had been no fighting since Tuesday night, when the enemy were repulsed with great slaughter.

The army moved to the position now occupied because it affords greatly superior advantages for the cooperation of the gunboats, of which seventeen are now in the river protecting the flanks of our army.

Statements of the casualties in the severe battles of eight days cannot yet be furnished.

Our forces were not beaten in any conflict, nor could they be driven from the field by the uttermost efforts of the enemy.

No guns have been lost since the engagement on Friday, June 27, when Gen. McCALL'S Division was, at the onset, overwhelmed, and twenty-five pieces fell into the hands of the enemy.

The sick and wounded are being sent to the hospitals.

At 1 o'clock yesterday (the 4th) the army was drawn up in its positions for review; the bands were playing, national salutes being fired, and things looking bright.

THE REBEL GUNBOAT TEASER CAPTURED.

FORT MONROE, Sunday, July 6.

The rebel gunboat Teaser was captured in a bend of the James River on the 4th inst. Very important papers were found on her.

CLOSING EVENTS OF THE STRUGGLE.

The following interesting details of the movement of our army to the James River, with the accompanying battles, are furnished by the correspondent of the Boston Journal:

THE RETREAT.

The passage across the Chickahominy was admirably conducted. It was not attempted at night, after the fight. It was delayed, even at the risk of another contest, to give time for the complete removal of all the stores. Early on Saturday morning the troops began to move across. The rebels were completely fooled. They supposed there would be another fight, and sent over across New Bridge a large body, on Saturday morning, to annihilate PORTER. At 10 o'clock PORTER was over the west side, looking upon them, with his batteries on Trent's Hill. It was regretted that we were obliged to leave several hundred wounded in the hospitals, who could not be removed without exposing the entire army. Having secured the position on the west side, the bridges were destroyed.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

There was yet much to be done to save the army. It was in a bad position. No one knew what obstacles there might be beyond White Oak Swamp—between that and the James River. If Gen. McCLELLAN had had an intention of making a concentrated movement upon Richmond from the south side, he was forced to give it up. His loss was severe. Lewis' Hill in front was an impregnable position, and he must get under the protection of the gunboats or be annihilated. Gen. PORTER marched around White Oak Swamp east, or rather crossed it at a narrow place, taking the road towards Carter's Station on James River. MORELL'S Division went down the Williamsburgh road to Savage Station, to hold in check any advance from the rear by way of Bottom's Bridge, and to make his way subsequently over to James River. SUMNER, FRANKLIN and KEYES were in front, near Lewis' Hill. They were ordered to send off all that could be transported of camp equipage and supplies, and burn the rest, and then withdraw. All night long, Saturday night, the trains moved away in the direction of James River. At Fair Oaks Station a large amount of Commissary stores were destroyed, and here it was found necessary to leave several hundred wounded in the hands of the enemy.

The enemy finding he had been fooled—that PORTER was on the south side—that there was nothing at the White House—began to repair the bridges across the Chickahominy, which had been blown up. Both parties were active. After our transportation had got away, SUMNER, KEYES, FRANKLIN and HEINTZELMAN withdrew slowly and in order, taking a new line fronting the Chickahominy. About daylight the rebels discovered what was going on, and poured out from the lines at Dr. Lewis' Hill and across New Bridge. They pressed first one flank and then another, but were not in sufficient force to make an attack upon a rear guard so brave and determined as that which closed over the long line of transportation. Slowly the army receded—slowly it neared James River. Rebel cavalry were seen here and there by PORTER in front, but they fled upon his advance. All Sunday was spent in this slow, cautious retirement.

SOUTH OF WHITE OAK SWAMP.

There are three main thoroughfares leading from Richmond southeast between White Oak Swamp and James River—the Williamsburgh Road, Central Road, leading to New-Market, and the Charles City Road. It was probable that the enemy would advance from all these roads to get in our advance. To make it more plain, let it be remembered that it was Gen. McCLELLAN'S intention to reach James River at Turkey Island Creek, which is eighteen miles from Richmond. These roads run in the same direction, and the rebels, not having baggage trains in front, can move faster than he. If they understand what he is up to by throwing a force along these roads, they can press his right flank, and perhaps prevent him from coming under the guns of the Monitor and Galena.

About 10 o'clock on Sunday, a portion of PORTER'S force, which had pushed up the New-Market road south of the swamp toward Richmond, came upon a large body of rebel cavalry—six or eight hundred—which were advancing. His artillery and infantry opened, and the rebels stood not upon the order of their going back, but like the guests of Hamlet's uncle went at once, with the exception of about fifty, who were taken prisoners. They were commanded by Major BAMER, of North Carolina.

While PORTER was thus putting out feelers, KEYES was in the advance nearing James River. Through Sunday and Sunday night the head of the column pushes its way. A body of rebels which had been down toward the White House, finding they were on the wrong scent, turned back, rebuilt Bottom's Bridge, and crossed to the south side, but were not in sufficient force to make an attack.

FIGHT ON SUNDAY—THE ENEMY REPULSED IN EVERY QUARTER.

The enemy suddenly became elated. His successes stimulated him to press us hard. He thought he would have us. SMITH'S Division and SEDGWICK'S fell back, via Savage Station, on the York River Railroad. It was necessary that they should halt and hold the position, that the long winding train might move away. They took positions in the woods north and east of a large field. All of their artillery, with the exception of two piecos, was masked in the front bearing upon the road down which they had retreated.

They had not long to wait. First the enemy's skirmishers came in sight, carefully smelling their way like venturesome mice toward toasted cheese. They saw the guns glittering like gold in the sunshine. They looked, talked, pointed. One or two officers went back. Other officers came up. Soon the dark masses of infantry followed. The two guns gave them a salute, but everywhere else there was silence. Flushed with victory, the rebels started upon the double quick across the field to capture the coveted prize. Suddenly, quick as a flash of lightning, twelve additional pieces hurled grape and canister upon them, followed by the roll of ten thousand muskets. No longer a thought of getting the pieces, but how to get out of the place. After a few frantic efforts, the ranks became confused, broken, disjointed, and notwithstanding the endeavors of officers to rally the wavering columns, they fled precipitately, leaving a multitude upon the plain dead and dying. It was a trap most successfully set and sprung upon a flushed foe. In this affair Gen. BURNS was slightly wounded.

FIGHT ON MONDAY.

But the enemy was pertinacious. He was determined to push Gen. McCLELLAN to the wall, instead of being pushed. HEINTZELMAN had charge of the rear. He determined not to be outflanked, and also determined to give the transportation time to reach the new base on James River.

KEYES, as has been stated, was in the advance, or rather opened the way for the retreat. Four or five miles below Bottom's Bridge, on the Chickahominy, is Long Bridge. To prevent the rebels from crossing there and attacking our left flank, SMITH was instructed to take position on the Long Bridge road. Next to him, looking south toward James River, was SUMNER'S corps of RICHARDSON'S and SEDGWICK'S. Still beyond was HEINTZELMAN'S corps—KEARNEY, HOOKER, SLOCUM and McCALL, the last two in reserve. The line was almost three miles long, sufficiently extended to cover all the roads running east from Richmond, south of the swamp.

To get a comprehensive view, select a point on James River, about ten miles below City Point—Hardin's Landing. Three roads from Richmond partially converge at that place.

It is Monday afternoon, and the head of KEYES' Division has reached the locality, and you see the interminable trains reaching up toward Richmond, and beyond all the Divisions mentioned, spread out like a fan. It was about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Placing his artillery in effective positions, the enemy opened fire upon SUMNER, but occasionally sending shell over the heads of the division at the wagon trains, to create a stampede among the teamsters. But the guards kept cool and prevented any disorder. After an hour's cannonade, conducted with great spirit on both sides, the enemy adopted a new kind of tactics—on attack on both flanks at once. It was made against SEDGWICK and RICHARDSON, and was pressed so hard that SLOCUM was ordered up from the reserve. The infantry action lasted from half-past three to six. It was a brave fight on the part of our exhausted troops. They held their ground, and repulsed the enemy.

It was an obstinate, bloody fight. These divisions have been so often in action that they know what it is to fight. More—they know how to fight. The enemy were not in sufficient force to attack SMITH. They made a demonstration, but the Green Mountain boys were called upon, and quickly settled the matter by driving the enemy out of sight in that quarter.

A BLOODY BATTLE.

HEINTZELMAN, as I have said, was on the road furthest over toward James River. Early in the afternoon the enemy, in strong force, appeared, opening with artillery, and advancing division after division of infantry in solid masses. He resisted bravely, but was compelled to fall back to a new position. The enemy followed, employing his old tactics of hurling masses of men, now upon the right, now upon the left, and now suddenly in the centre. He held his ground unaided till 6 o'clock. His ranks were terribly thinned, and he was compelled to bring up McCALL once more. His division had been in nearly all the fights. It was worn out. But with hearts as true as steel they responded to the order. Simultaneously upon their advance came fresh troops from Richmond, and loud and terrific as at any time during the six days' fighting roared the contest. But the masses of the enemy rolled along the road. Their leaders had no care for saving life. This was war—a strife for mastery. It was their determination to win, no matter what it cost. They rushed on impetuously, charged upon our batteries, captured REYNOLDS and took a large number of prisoners. Here the brave and efficient commander of the corps, Gen. McCALL, went down at the head of his troops, supposed to be badly wounded. A score of officers fell. The lines gave way. It was a critical moment. Now or never was brave work to be done. Now or never was the army to be saved. All hearts felt it. All hands were ready. Men lived ages in those moments. O you who live far away among peaceful valleys, on sunny hill-sides, with smiling children at your feet, reading this tame account, cannot know the thrill which brave men feel when the heart swells up from its most inmost depths to dare all, to do all that God has given to save defeat! Untutored men look with clearest vision in such moments down the future ages. They see, they feel that uncounted millions are beckoning them to do their duty now. They are great moments!

SEDGWICK came. HOOKER and KEARNEY came—HOOKER with the Second New-Hampshire and First and Eleventh Massachusetts; KEARNEY with the life-blood of New-Jersey—brave men all of them. They rallied for a desperate charge—one which has determination in it, when every man feels that he stands at the gateway of centuries, as Leonidas stood at Thermopylæ. Twenty-four cannon additional were brought up. The united divisions, firm and unyielding as the granite of their native mountains, moved to the charge—onward, right onward, unheeding death or life! They came upon the enemy like a thunderbolt, bore down the living masses in front as if they were automatons—sent them flying over the field, and captured twelve pieces of artillery; one brigade, including three regiments; also, Col. PENDLETON, of the Louisiana Battalion, and ex-Congressman LAMAR, of the First Georgia Regiment.

It was the finale. The enemy was defeated at last. He had come on with high hopes; he retired discomfitted. It was a brilliant victory. It inspiritdd our troops. Here let me speak of the influence of music. While the fight was going on, Gen. MORELL ordered the bands to play. For a month they have been silent, under orders. They gave "Yankee Doodle," the "Star Spangled Banner" and "Hail Columbia." It was like bread to a hungry man. The troops felt the soul-stirring strains, and forgot that they were tired, hungry, exhausted, and ready to faint.

THE GUNBOATS.

The rebels had thrown a body of men close down upon the river. The gunboats, when the fight began, moved up and opened with 10-inch shells upon the table land. It was a timely assistance, otherwise the rebels could have crept along the bank, flanked HEINTZELMAN and reached his rear. What narrow margins there have been in this war.

I can say but little of the loss to us. The reports are varied—one as high as thirty thousand, one as low as ten thousand. We have lost three or four thousand who were taken prisoners. I presume that seven thousand will more than cover the casualities.

REBEL LOSS.

I see no wisdom in stating that the rebels have lost two to our one. They have suffered quite as much as we. Fictitious estimates would do us no good, neither would it hurt them. There is but little doubt that Stonewall JACKSON was killed by a canister shot from MARTIN'S Battery.

Gen. BARNWELL RHETT, of South Carolina, was probably killed in the attack made upon SMITH and SEDGWICK, on Sunday. Gen. LONGSTREET is reported wounded.

But I must close, or miss the mail. I have no conclusions to deduce. Each intelligent reader can form his own conclusions as to what we have gained, what we have lost. I will only say that to one who has witnessed military operations for a twelvemonth, there has been no moment more critical than the present. The rebels, by conscription, have raised an immense army, and put it into the field at the very moment when ours is weakest. They have concentrated all their forces. They hold life of little value, if they can but win. That is their object. Unless we awake from our apathy, unless there shall be harmonious counsels and increased energy of administration, the wished for day of peace and a united nation will be postponed to the far future.

CARLETON.

THE BATTLE OF LAST MONDAY.

Capt. BRADY, of the Pennsylvania Artillery, has written to his wife an account of the battle of Monday last, which she has politely placed at the disposal of the Philadelphia Bulletin. It is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS, LIGHT BATTERY H, FIRST PENNSYLVANIA ARTILLERY, NEAR FORT DARLING, July 1, 1862.

We have had a victory! Five thousand rebel prisoners and thirty pieces of artillery. In the morning everything indicated a hard-fought field and a retreat before dark, as some of the troops had already began to fall back towards the James River.

Orders were given to push all the wagons under cover, at a certain place, simultaneously with the commencement of the action. So the struggle began in right good earnest on the right, and then shifted to the left. Secesh appeared to have it all his own way till the proper time came, and then, to his surprise, he was marched back again without orders from his superior officers, as if it was understood that they had gone far enough with the joke.

McCLELLAN was there in person, and attended to their case himself. Our army would not budge an inch for them. The enemy could not understand this kind of retreating. Countermarching back again, the right falls back and then marches to the left. Secesh sees this and is exalted. He takes another swig at his canteen of whisky, (a thing which they are all well braced with, for canteens of whisky are found on all the killed and wounded,) tightens the straps around his legs, (for he has to be strapped lest he fall out of the saddle,) and rushes forward on our lines head foremost, only to be mowed down by our left wing, that had marched to the place of the right.

Of course JEFF. did not see this. He thinks he is following our retreating troops, but he finds his drunken army pitching on to advancing bayonets. They cannot stop; onward they fling, like madmen, and once broken they cannot be rallied. Secesh has found that McCLELLAN has retreated far enough.

The action was a magnificent one. When the rebel lines had been compleby broken, and filled up by SMITH, CORNEY, (sic.,) McCALL, SUMNER, and MEAGHER with his Irish bayonets, the gunboats pitched into Fort Darling, and in about twenty minutes blew up the magazine of the fort. It was a grand spectacle. Then turning on the flying foe, they hammered them back toward Richmond.

For a long time we were drawn up on a large plain covered with wheat ready for cutting, three miles each way. You could scarcely see a horse standing in it. In there were a hundred pieces of artillery and many regiments of cavalry, ready to pitch in and spill the rebel canteens.

But we were not wanted, so we had to stand there and listen. Everything was cast off and ready for action, with our guns shotted. But our troops held their own and won, and the charges were withdrawn from the guns.

Night came, and we lay down by our guns in the wheat. This morning, though

"The dew on our manties hung heavy and chill," we rose gaily to our posts, ready to go forward, as I understand the order.

Poor EASTON was shot through the heart in Friday's fight. His cannoniers stuck to their guns till the rebel cavalry actually knocked the ammunition they were putting into them out of their hands. They took his battery and cried out to him to "surrender." "Never!" was the reply, and in an instant he was knocked ont of his saddle with a shower of bullets.

Lieut. MONK, of McCARTY'S Battery, and DOUGHERTY, of FLOOD'S, in Sunday's skirmish or fight, gave the enemy's cavalry a lesson in dismounting on the charge, unsaddling some two hundred of them. Many of them were strapped to their horses and of course were dragged or fell with them. Altogether it was a lively time for these batteries.

We were stationed, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, guarding the railroad bridge. It was a laborious duty. Mr. FAGAN, with two of my guns, I posted at Bottom's Bridge. In due time the bridge was burned, and when the final order came to return, the train, which was composed of many cars and a locomotive, was fired and run into the river, as it contained a great deal of ammunition. It blew up, throwing fragments of the cars and locomotive thousands of feet into the sky. It was one of the grandest spectacles I may ever witness. We were within about fifteen hundred yards of it at the time. It must have astonished the Secesh, who were constantly hovering around the bridge, with about 5,000 troops and some artillery.

On Saturday they made a demonstration with their guns upon Mr. FAGAN'S section at Bottom's Bridge. I heard the firing and knew where they were. So, after FAGAN gave them a few planters, I opened, along with a brass piece of Mr. WILDERS, from the railroad track, silencing them in five rounds.

They were completely scared. Every shot told, and coming from a point not reckoned on, compelled them to respect Mr. FAGAN'S position and withdraw. It was inferred that this party had run out of whisky, for they "dried up" very soon.

When the train was blown up, our artillery ceased firing, and was then ordered to James River to rejoin the corps. There is every reasonable appearance of a victorious entrance into Richmond soon.

(Signed) JAMES BRADY,
Captain First Pennsylvania Artillery.

THE BATTLE OF WHITE OAK SWAMP.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer gives these interesting particulars of the battle of White Oak Swamp:

Having crossed the bridge over "White Oak" Swamp, it was blown up, thus checking the advance of the enemy. On Monday morning the enemy began the attack on our rear, having rebuilt the bridge. They came on in immense force, following the road we had come.

It soon became apparent that the enemy intended to precipitate themselves upon us with all his force. In view of this SEDGWICK was stationed on the left of the road, just below the bridge, and FRANKLIN'S Division, with a portion of SMITH'S Division, on the right. KEARNEY'S Division was thrown across the New-Market road, HOOKER'S Division across the Central road, and RICHARDSON'S Division across the Charles City road, all three leading down from Richmond.

About 2 o'clock the enemy was discovered advancing along all these roads in immense force, the clouds of dust along the line of approach being distinctly visible. At this time the firing was terrific, coming from every quarter of the compass, the effort of the enemy evidently being to surround us, and either cut us to pieces or drive us into the river. All this was the result of their delusion with regard to our movement; they persisting in believing it was a retreat, while, in fact, it was a deliberate and successful strategic movement.

The rebels fought with desperation, hoping to detach our divisions and crush them in detail. Gen. McCLELLAN was everywhere through the fight, directing reinforcements to be sent wherever the front seemed weakest. Gen. McCALL, with the Pennsylvania Reserves, was stationed in the rear of the several points held by the commanders named, and within supporting distance of them all.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon dispatches were received at headquarters that the enemy were being successfully repulsed at all points, with the exception of Gen. KEARNEY'S, who reported that the enemy were too strong for him, and were forcing him from his position.

Word was immediately sent to Gen. McCALL to advance to his relief, which his men did on the double-quick, notwithstanding their previous fatigue and exhaustion. They were soon engaged in the thickest of the fight, which grew hotter, as every moment brought fresh troops from Richmond to replace those whom our brave Reserves were leveling with terible rapidity.

The tide of battle ebbed and flowed over the plain for nearly an hour with uncertain result. At this time Gen. McCALL and his staff galloped toward the front to incite his brave troops to stronger exertions, when he was seen to fall from his horse, mortally wounded in the breast.

His staff gathered around him, and begged to be allowed to bear his body to a place of quiet and safety. "No," said he, "let me die on the field," and in the momentary confusion which the fall of their beloved leader made, his division was slowly driven back. Almost at the same time, Capt. H. J. BIDDLE, Aid to Gen. McCALL, was mortally wounded.

Still the contest raged more madly, the efforts of his men to reach him being almost frantic. In this desperate charge the loss of life on both sides exceeded anything that had occurred since the contest commenced. The dead lay in piles as high as tents. Among the slain were Lieuts. J. H. KUHN and W. M. WATMOUGH. Gen. MEADE was severely wounded in the abdomen, and Gen. REYNOLDS was taken prisoner. It is since ascertained that he is unhurt in Richmond.

At this juncture word was dispatched to Gen. SUMNER that assistance was required by Gen. KEARNEY, and his men immediately advanced to the critical position on the double quick, with their bayonets fixed at the charge. As they came up our tired troops fell back, and the avalanche of bristling steel was upon the rebels, who fairly reeled with the shock as our men shook off their pierced bodies like clods from their keen lances. This broke the rebel advance, and they fell back into confusion and retreated.

At this time the rebels had brought up a battery between the river and New-Market road, with the design of shelling our position. The gunboats Galena and Aroostook, which had been lying quiet, but keen spectators of the battle, unable to fire for fear of injuring our men, were at length signaled from a station on shore as to the direction in which they might send their fearful missiles.

This they did with unerring aim, and the effect was prodigious. The retreat of the rebels increased to a run, and the run enlarged to a skedaddle of the most approved stampede, and our brave but exhausted troops arranged themselves for the night as best they could after the trying scenes through which they had passed.

Each State has the power to officer and train them [illegible]

You state after quoting the 12th, 15th and 16th grants of power to Congress, that "these grants of power all relate to the same subject matter, and are all contained in the same section of the Constitution and by the well-known rule of construction, must be taken, as a whole, and construed together."

I confess myself at a loss to perceive in what manner these careful and well-defined provisions of the Constitution, regulating the organization and government of the militia, can be understood as applying in the remotest degree to the armies of the Confederacy; nor can I conceive how the grant of exclusive power to declare and carry on war by armies raised and supported by the Confederacy, is to be restricted or diminished by the clauses which grant a divided power over the militia. On the contrary, the delegation of authority over the militia, so far as granted, appears to me to be plainly an additional enumerated power, intended to strengthen the hands of the Confederate Government in the discharge of its permanent duty, the common defence of the States.

Congress may call forth the militia to execute the Confederate laws. The State has not surrendered the power to call them forth to execute State laws.

Congress may call them forth to repel invasion; so may the State, for it has expressly reserved this right.

Congress may call them forth to suppress insurrections; and so may the State, for the power is implicitly reserved of governing all the militia except the part in actual service in the Confederacy.

This argument appears to me unsound. All the powers of Congress are enumerated in one section; and the three paragraphs quoted can no more control each other, by reason of their location in the same section, than they can control any of the other paragraphs preceding, intervening, or succeeding. So far as the subject matter is concerned, I have already endeavored to show that the armies mentioned in the 12th paragraph are a subject matter as distinct from the militia mentioned in the 15th and 16th, as they are from the navy, mentioned in the 13th. Nothing can so mislead as to construe together, and as one whole, the carefully-separated clauses which define the different powers to be exercised over distinct subjects by the Congress. But you add, that "by the grant of power to Congress to raise and support armies without qualification, the framers of the Constitution intended the regular armies of the Confederacy, and not armies composed of the whole militia of all the States."

I must confess myself somewhat at a loss to understand this position. If I am right that the militia is a body of enrolled State soldiers, it is not possible in the nature of things, that armies raised by the Confederacy can "be composed of the whole militia of all the States." The militia may be called forth, in whole or in part, into the Confederate service, but do not thereby become part of the "armies raised" by Congress—remain militia, and go home when the emergency which provoked their call has ceased. Armies raised by Congress are of course out of the same population as the militia organized by the States, and to deny Congress the power to draft a citizen into the army, or to receive his voluntary offer of service, because he is a member of the State militia, is to deny the power to raise an army at all, for practically, all men fit for service in the army may be embraced in the militia organizations of the several States. You seem, however, to suggest rather than directly to assert that the conscript law may be unconstitutional because it comprehends all arms-bearing men between 18 and 35 years; at least this is an inference which I draw from your expression "armies composed of the whole militia of all the States." But it is obvious that if Congress has power to draft into the armies raised by it any citizens at all (without regard to the fact whether they are not members of militia organizations,) the power must be coextensive with the exigencies of the occasion, or it becomes illusory, and the extent of the exigency may be determined by Congress; for the Constitution has left the power without any check or restriction than the Executive veto. Under ordinary circumstances the power thus delegated to Congress is scarcely felt by the States. At the present moment, when our very existence is threatened by armies vastly superior in numbers to ours, the necessity for defence has induced a call "not for the whole militia of all the States," not for any militia, but for men to compose armies for the Confederate States.

Surely there is no mystery on this subject. During our whole past history, as well as during our recent one year's experience as a new Confederacy, the militia "have been called forth to repel invasion," in numerous instances; as they never came otherwise than as bodies organized by the State, with their company, field and general officers; and when the emergency had passed, they went home again.

I cannot perceive how any one can interpret the conscription law as taking away from the State the power to appoint officers to their militia. You observe on this point in your letter, that unless your construction is adopted, "the very object of the States in reserving the power of appointing the officers is defeated, and that portion of the Constitution is not only a nullity, but the whole military power of the States, and the entire control of the militia, with the appointment of the officers, is vested in the Confederate Government, whenever it choose to call its own action 'raising an army,' and not 'calling forth the militia.'"

I can only say, in reply to this, that the power of Congress depends upon the real nature of the act it proposes to perform, not on the name given to it; and I have endeavored to show that its action is really that of "raising an army," and bears no semblance to "calling forth the militia." I think I may safely venture the assertion that there is not one man out of a thousand of those who will do service under the conscription act that would describe himself, while in the Confederate service as being a militiaman; and if I am right in this assumption, the popular understanding concurs entirely with my own deductions from the Constitution as to the meaning of the word "militia."

My answer has grown to such a length that I must confine myself to one more quotation from your letter. You proceed: "Congress shall have power to raise armies. How shall it be done?" The answer is clear. In conformity to the provisions of the Constitution, which expressly provides that when the militia of the States are called forth to repel invasion, and employed in the service of the Confederate States, which is now the case, the State shall appoint the officers."

I beg you to observe that the answer, which you say is clear, is not an answer to the question put. The question is, How are the armies to be raised? The answer given is, that when the militia are called forth to repel invasion, the States shall appoint the officers.

There seems to me to be a conclusive test on that whole subject. By our Constitution, Congress may declare war offensive as well as defensive. It may acquire territory. Now, suppose that, for good cause and to right unprovoked injuries, Congress should declare war against Mexico, and invade Sonora. The militia could not be called forth in such case, the right to call it being limited "to repel invasions." Is it not plain that the law now under discussion, if passed under such circumstances, could by no possibility be aught else than a law to "raise an army?" Can one and the same law be construed into a "calling forth the militia," if the war be defensive, and a "raising of armies," if the war be offensive?

At some future day after our independence shall have been established, it is no improbable supposition that our enemy may be tempted to abuse his moral power by depredations on our commerce, and that we may be compelled to assert our rights by offensive war. How is this to be carried on? Of what is the army to be composed? If this Government cannot call on its arms-bearing population more than as militia, and if the militia can only be called forth to repel invasion, we should be utterly helpless to vindicate our honor or protect our rights. War has been well styled "the terrible litigation of nations." Have we so formed our Government that in litigation we may never be plaintiff? Surely this cannot have been the intention of the framers of our compact.

In no aspect in which I can view this law, can I find just reason to distrust the propriety of my action in approving and signing it and the question presented involves consequences, both immediate and remote, too momentous to permit me to leave your objections unanswered.

In conclusion, I take great pleasure in recognising that the history of the past year affords the amplest justification for your assertion, that if the question has been whether the conscription law was necessary in order to raise men in Georgia, the answer must have been in the negative. Your noble State has promptly responded to every call that it has been my duty to make on her; and to you personally, as her Executive, I acknowledge my indebtedness for the prompt, cordial and effective coöperation you have afforded me in the effort to defend our common country against the common enemy.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JEFFERSON DAVIS.

His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN, Governor of Georgia, Milledgeville.

GOV. BROWN'S REJOINDER.

The Atlanta Intelligencer, of the 22d of June, publishes a seven column letter from Gov. BROWN, of Georgia, repudiating and nullifying the Conscription Act. The letter is addressed to JEFF. DAVIS:

"Looking to the magnitude of the right involved, and the disastrous consequences which, I fear, must follow what I consider a bold and dangerous usurpation by Congress of the reserved rights of the States, and a rapid stride toward military despotism, I very much regret that I have not, in the preparation of this reply, the advice and assistance of a number equal to your Cabinet, of the many 'eminent citizens' who, you admit, entertain with me the opinion that the Conscription act is a palpable violation of the Constitution of the Confederacy. Without this assistance, however, I must proceed individually to express to you some views, in addition to those contained in my former letters, and to reply to such points made by you in the argument as seem to my mind to have the most plausibility in sustaining your conclusion.

The sovereignty and independence of each one of the thirteen States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, will not, I presume, be denied by any, nor will it be denied that each of these States acted in its separate capacity, as an independent sovereign, in the adoption of the Constitution. The Constitution is, therefore, a league between sovereigns. In order to place upon it a just construction, we must apply to it the rules, which, by common consent, govern in the construction of all written constitutions and laws. One of the first of these rules is, to inquire what was the intention of those who made the Constitution.

To enable us to learn this intention, it is important to inquire what they did, and what they said they meant, when they were making it. In other words, to inquire for the coëmporaneous construction put upon the instrument by those who made it, and the explanations of its meaning by those who proposed each part to the Convention, which induced the Convention to adopt each part.

Viewing the Conscription Act, in this particular, as not only unconstitutional, but as striking a blow at the very existence of the State, by disbanding the portion of her militia left within her limits, when much the larger part of her "arms-bearing people" are absent in other States in the military service of the Confederacy, leaving their families and other helpless women and children subject to massacre by negro insurrection, for want of an organized force to suppress it, I felt it an imperative duty, which I owed to the people of this State, to inform you in a former letter that I could not permit the disorganization to take place, nor the State officers to be compelled to leave their respective commands and enter the Confederate service as conscripts. Were it not a fact well known to the country that you have in service tens of thousands of men without arms, and with no immediate prospect of getting arms, who must remain for months consumers of our scanty supplies of provisions, without ability to render service, while their labor would be most valuable in their farms and workshops, there might be the semblance of a plea of necessity for forcing the State officers to leave their commands, with the homes of their people unprotected, and go into camps of instruction, under Confederate officers, often much more ignorant than themselves of military science or training. I must, therefore, adhere to my position, and maintain the integrity of the State Government, in its Executive Legislative, Judicial and Military Departments, as long as I can command sufficient force to prevent it from being disbanded, and its people reduced to a state of provincial dependence upon the central power.

If I have used strong language in any part of this letter, I beg you to attribute it only to my zeal in the advocacy of principles, and a cause which I consider no less than the cause of constitutional liberty, imperiled by the erroneous views and practices of those placed upon the watch-tower, as its constant guardians.

NEWS FROM BUENOS AYRES.

European Mail—Its Thrilling News—Scene in the American Church—Trial of Rosas Ended and he Condemned—British Claims on Paraguay—Arrivals and Departures of United States Vessels—Price of Land—Prices of Produce—Flour—Lumber—Nutria Skins—Hides—Wools.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BUENOS AYRES, S. A., Thursday, May 15, 1862.

This morning the British mail steamer Mersey arrived bringing the European mails for the last half month. The general character of the commercial news is highly unfavorable for this country, and the political news is thrilling. We have the naval battle at the mouth of James River with the Merrimac, and the energetic movements of the army and navy of the United States. Then there comes the purpose of NAPOLEON to withdraw his troops from Rome, leaving as a relic the old doctrine of temporal power. The news has profoundly moved this Catholic community.

The last English mail brought to this city the half-monthly mail of 27,000 letters and 26,300 packages of printed matter. The quantity brought by the French steamer is also great, but less than this. Within a few years correspondence has very much increased between this city and foreign parts. The American clergyman here, Rev. Mr. GOODFELLOW, informs me that in his congregation, within the last four years, the quantity of periodicals taken has increased 300 per cent.

One would make inferences from these facts highly favorable to the state of intelligence and of morals. This would be correct. Schools are multiplying rapidly, not that education is becoming cheaper, but the people generally afford it better. There is in this Province a common school system, and private schools are very numerous, and those well established are highly profitable. The increased attention to the quiet of the city has resulted in such complete success as to have attracted the approbation of the Governor in his annual message.

The tribunals of the country have had before them for ten years the case of Governor-General Don MANUEL ROSAS, once autocrat of these countries, and now a political refugee residing at Southampton, England. He is charged with every crime common to tyrants, not excepting high treason, murder and robbery, and after so long a time he has been found guilty, and is condemned to be shot, and his property is confiscated. The sentence does not provide for catching him, and he is not likely to be incommoded by the finding of the Court. It is a serious example of the fickleness of fortune.

The British community here is elated with the result of the visit of their Minister to the Confederation, on a mission of considerable more than etiquette to Paraguay. Some years ago a citizen of England was imprisoned in Paraguay—some officers of Government had grossly insulted the English Consul as such. The Paraguayan war steamer Tacuari had been blockaded once for a month or so in the harbor of Buenos Ayres—at another time, in broad daylight, a Paraguayan war steamer had run down and sunk an English steamer, the Little Polly. For all these matters there must be a settlement. The third one named was against Paraguay, all the rest were against England, and in a few days Mr. THORNTON returned, with all perfectly settled, and he was honorably conducted back in a Paraguayan steamer-of-war.

This port has not been so lively as usual for the last month; only twenty vessels arrived in the last fifteen days, and twenty-five sailed. Of vessels arrived from the United States, there are here the Pacific, lumber; H. L. Rutgers, lumber; Hebron, salt; Nicholas Cuyvin, lumber. In the same time there have sailed United States vessels Sparking Sea and the M. A. Herrara.

In the first half of the year 1861, the whole amount of imports was $235,188,000, currency; and the whole of the exports was $143,939,000, currency. This shows a balance against the country of about ninety-one millions of current dollars, which is equivalent to about four millions of Spanish dollars. What shall we do? This is the usual method of footing up. There is but one solution. The difference is made up in the inflated value of the circulating medium, which is entirely paper. The day of reckoning is not the less uncertain for being distant.

At the same time the real wealth of the country is increasing very rapidly. A late enumeration of the Province shows the existence of fourteen millions of cattle, three millions of horses, and twenty-seven millions of sheep. All these contribute to the rising wealth and current commerce of each year. What is called the frontier is every year extending itself by the opening and stocking of new farms. As a necessity, the prices of land advance rapidly, and there is a golden future for these vast plains. Wheat grows here as well as the United States, and yet this country imports 300,000 Spanish dollars' worth of wheat and flour. Tobacco grows here luxuriantly, and yet they import 250,000 Spanish dollars' worth of tobacco. The table should be turned, and some day it will be.

The city is rapidly putting on its holiday dress, preparatory to the National Anniversary of May 25 prox. At this time streets are cleaned, parks repaired, houses painted, public buildings are refurnished and replenished, and the milliners, dressmakers, hatters, tailors, and all others who contribute to the decoration of man or of his domicil, are having a harvest time. As on that day the National Convention will assemble, it is certain to be a grand celebration. Though it will fall on the Sabbath, this will not at all interfere with the noise of artillery or the general display.

Present prices in the United States make almost all your products too dear to be bought here. Flour continues to come and sell for $9 on board. The Pyranies brought 300 barrels refined sugar, which brought on board 20½ rials silver. The last prices of pine have been, for white and spruce, $35; yellow, $50 per 1,000 feet, on board.

Within a few days, 42,000 nutria skins have been bought at 1¾ silver rials each, (about 21 cents,) and 53,000 dry hides have been bought for the United States at 42@43 silver rials per pesado, (35 lbs.) There have been sold a quantity of ostrich feathers at $31 (about $1 25) per lb. There is little doing in wools, although there is a stock on hand of 280,000 arrobes.

Conduct of "Respectable" Women—Military and Political Matters.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Friday, June 27, 1862.

"Well-dressed and apparently respectable women" take special pains to pass Gen. BOYLE'S Headquarters, and manifest contempt for the inmates. If found out, they may be escorted to the Female Prison. They or their "gentlemen" protectors may be made responsible. Such females remind us of "indiscreet misses in their teens, and daughters of respecta- [illegible] demonstrated the most intense [illegible] toward all "Lincoln hirelings," and even [illegible] trampled upon and desecrated their graves. Anyhow, despite the female and male secesh, Tennessee is secured.

Arrests continue in Owen, Henry, Davies, Grant, Franklin and Barren Counties. BOYLE is going right ahead. If promptly and amply sustained, he will most successfully carry out his plans for the establishment, beyond peradventure, of the loyalty, peace and safety of his own beloved Kentucky.

Capt. JENKINS has awarded to parties here contracts for 371,000 feet timber and 545,000 shingles, as materials for barracks at this post. Col. SWORDS has awarded contracts for 1,800 cavalry horses; Capt. W. J. HEADY advertises for 1,000. 9,000 boxes hard bread, from St. Louis, discharged here this week for the army.

The War Department's attention is called to the injustice and inhumanity of reporting as deserters or absent without leave officers and soldiers while stretched on beds or sickness.

Union Nominating Conventions are held all over the State, and one has been held in this county. Messrs. ANDREWS and RANKIN, of the Legislature, are nominated as Circuit Judges. Wherever we have concert and concentration of action, all our candidates will be elected. The resolutions of all our Conventions are substantially identical with those of the recent Union Convention at Indianapolis. Our opponents are Secessionists, in the guise of "Democrats" standing on the Vallandigham manifesto. The members and nominees of their Conventions are watched. An intelligent Indianian assures me that the Unionists of Indiana, upon their Indianapolis platform, will carry their State and Congressional tickets by a majority of 50,000. PONTIAC.

A CLAM BAKE.

Clams, Politics, Poetry, Patriotism, Police, Potatoes, Public Men and a Good Time.

As jovial, jolly, sociable, agreeable and well known to the public set of good fellows as ever appreciated a clam collected at Fort Washington Point on Saturday afternoon. By some remarkable coincident, cause known only to the popular President of the Fort Washington Clam Bake Club, JOHN E. DEVLIN, Esq., a large company of notables collected on the Point about 2 P. M. There was Surveyor ANDREWS, who came up on duty, in search of liquors which might be smuggled in quantities of more than 93 gallons in one cask. Superintendent JOHN A. KENNEDY found it necessary to look after the up town police; Senator R. B. CONNOLLY went to look after some of his constituents; the younger STETSONS of the Astor House felt bound to lend their advice to the chef. Rev. Father CUMMINGS and Rev. Dr. IVES lent the influence of their good example. The old war horse, ELIJAH F. PURDY, had to look after the youngsters; Sheriff JAMES LYNCH to keep the posse in order; JEEMS PIPES, of Pipesville, and E. F. UNDERHILL, to enliven the scene with characteristic delineations. Then there were Judges Hilton, Sutherland and O'Conner, Street Commissioner Shepherd F. Knapp, Malcolm Campbell, J. P. Cummings, Thos. C. Fields, H. B. Perkins, Commissary-General Welch, Anson Herrick, Jas. Gordon Bennet, Jr., Henry Erben, Richard Schell, Thos. Dunlap, and a host of other social and political celebrities. But the qualifications for membership of the Club are not so much political as gastronomic, gustatory and bibulous. The capacity for degurgitation and deglutition are regarded as of more consequence than the art of wire-pulling. To eat, drink and be merry, constitute the platform of principles. History does not record an instance of a member of the Club failing to observe his duties. All religions and all shades of politics are represented, from the Puritan to the Catholic—from the hardest-Hard and softest Soft to the conservative Republican and John Brown Abolitionist; so that their digestive apparatus is unimpaired, their mastication perfect, and their appetites good, and they good fellows, are welcomed to the festive board—pine board tables, spread in a shady bower on the rock-bound banks of the placid Hudson.

Need we describe the mysterious process of the clam-bake—the huge fire, the burning brands and coals withdrawn, the hot stones, heaping sea-weed, the clean sheet, the layer of clams, the coverlid, the additional sea-weed, the sauce piquante garnishing the steaming pile in bright tin cups. And then how the guests are seated. Judge O'CONNOR presides, and stills the clam-orous call for food by a promise of speedy satisfaction. And when the luscious clams, temptingly open, are taken from between the warm sheets, now they are relished. How the faucet portion is removed and the dainty epicure, first plunging the delicate morsel in the savory bath, conveys it to the de-clam-atory aperture, and then, dire clam-ity, it disappears, with the ex-clam-ation "Good," and ac-clam-ation of delight. But, we forbear in pity for our unfortunate readers, who were not vouchsafed this feast, which would tempt the palate of the most stoical bran-bread-ite. Let it suffice to say that the feast of reason and flow of soul—particularly the flow of soul, followed. Much might be said of what occurred at the post prandial feast. PERKINS was there—Hosea B—and in obedience to the unanimous call, read his, or rather, PARKE BENJAMIN'S poem, "Washington," in eloquent style. We will spare Mr. FIELDS the trouble of reading, in print, his criticism of the poem. Notwithstanding its brevity, the criticism was deserving of perpetuation, particularly those portions where the critic descended temporarily from the sublime to the ridiculous, and once to the point. Mr. UNDERHILL'S and Mr. MASSETT'S songs, stories, and side-splitting delineations, were the life of the day. Then there was a spice of earnestness in the unanimous tribute to the efficiency of our police system and its able executive officer, JOHN A. KENNEDY; a tribute of respect and esteem for our absent friend—the victim to the advice of his superior in office, ISAAC V. FOWLER—and the strong spirit of patriotism and national ardor that pervaded the assembly. Then the spicy speeches of Senator CONNOLLY on naturalization—of Mr. FAGAN on the great excellence of lager bier—should be reported verbatim. The party returned to the City, in the evening, with the universal sentiment—"Clam-bakes esto perpetua.

The two Astor House waiters, HENRY MURPHY and JOHN HOGAN, who were killed at Fort Washington Station on Saturday morning, were engaged in removing from the way train articles to be used at the clam bake. The express train, said to be behind time, came dashing along, and killed them almost instantly. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict of accidental death, but it would seem to be highly reprehensible to have passengers on the road subjected to the danger of such accidents. An approaching train from the North can be seen but a few rods before it is too late to get out of the way.

An Easy Way to Serve the Union Cause.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF NEW-YORK:

A notice in the NEW-YORK TIMES and other daily papers having attracted my attention, viz.: "Volunteer Watchers wanted at the Hospitals for Sick and Wounded Soldiers," I gave my name, and had the good fortune to attend at the Hospital corner of Sixth-avenue and Fifty-first-street last Sunday evening and night. My object in this communication is to call the attention of our young men to the importance of this work. Many of us, as is the case with myself, are unable to take part in the great struggle actively in the field; but one night a week in the hospitals is a very small sacrifice of personal comfort, and the satisfaction that will be experienced will amply reward the volunteer.

One who has been a WATCHER.

Not at the Submission Meeting.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

My name appears in your edition of the 3d inst., as among the distinguished persons who represented the secession or Anti-Union meeting of the 2d inst., held at the Cooper Institute. I desire to state that I was not present at the meeting and that so far from sympathizing with its objects I am still to be numbered among the few or many who believe that this rebellion cannot be put down until the cause that led to its existence is removed.

I am, Sir, very respectfully yours,
July 5, 1862. C. E. BIRDSALL.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

AN OUTRAGEOUS THEFT—A WOUNDED SOLDIER ROBBED OF OVER $300.—A boy named THOMAS SAVAGE, aged 16 years, who says he is a butcher by occupation, was brought before Justice BRENNAN at the Tombs, yesterday, upon the charge of having robbed a wounded soldier of all the money he had, which was the sum of $307. The soldier's name is JACOB BERGMAN. He arrived in this City on Saturday, direct from the army of the Potomac, where he was engaged in the six successive battles recently fought in front of Richmond, and on the banks of the Chickahominy and James rivers. In the last action he was so seriously wounded that it was thought advisable to send him home. Before leaving, however, he obtained from the proper officer a discharge, which states, among other things, that he has served bravely, and with credit to himself, in MCCLELLAN'S army for the last ten months. All arrearages of pay were received by him in the shape of three $100 Treasury notes and a few notes of a smaller amount [illegible] let fall his [illegible] accidentally his hard earnings. He did not [illegible] but about half an hour after he discovered the loss and gave an alarm. The doors of the house were immediately closed, to prevent any one from escaping, and it was proposed that a search should be instituted. As soon as a proposition for a general search was made, young SAVAGE was the first to accede to it, and his apparent anxiety to have a general overhauling of all pockets completely deceived those who might otherwise have had some suspicion that he was the guilty party. In the meantime, some person had kindly volunteered to obtain the services of Capt. PETTY, of the Fifth Precinct, and he was soon in attendance. Under his directions all the persons in the room were carefully and thoroughly searched, but no clue to the missing money could be obtained, until the last one of the party had been examined. On account of the active part which SAVAGE had taken in the affair, and the great anxiety which he manifested in the recovery of the money no suspicions were entertained that he could be the guilty man, and he was, therefore, left to be examined last. An examination of one of his boots revealed the saree $100 Treasury notes, and under the canvass lining in the lower part of one leg of his pantaloons there were found the other $7 in small bills. The pocket-book he had managed by some means to throw into a neighboring vault. Justice BRENNAN committed the accused for trial. Capt. PETTY and his men were very active and energetic in their efforts to recover the money, and to bring the offender to justice.

THE ACCIDENT ON THE HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD—THE CORONER'S INVESTIGATION.—Coroner RANNEY yesterday concluded the inquest upon the bodies of the two men—employes at the Astor House—who were accidentally killed on Saturday at the Fort Washington Station, on the Hudson River Railroad, an account of which was published in the TIMES of yesterday. The bodies were brought down to the dépôt of the Railroad Company at Thirty-first-street, where Coroner RANNEY went into a full and thorough investigation of the causes which led to the sad calamity. After an examination of all the witnesses whose testimony could throw any light upon the subject, the jury in each case were unanimous in the opinion that the accident was attributable solely to want of proper care on the part of the deceased. A policeman who was at the place when the accident occurred, states that he shouted to the parties, just as they stepped off the car upon the down track, and told them that there was a down train close at hand, at the same time he seized hold of one of the deceased men, and tried to pull him out of danger; but the men, he thinks, were too much frightened or bewildered to understand fully the peril they were in, or else they had not the power to throw themselves promptly out of the reach of the locomotive. A deep cut, and a curve in the road, just above the station, prevented them from seeing the down train until it was very close upon them, but still, all the witnesses unite in stating that there was abundance of time for them to cross the track, if due diligence and caution had been exercised. As to the imprudence of their alighting upon the side of the car next to the down track, the jury, so far as we have been able to learn, expressed no opinion.

A HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.—An inquest was held yesterday by Coroner RANNEY upon the body of SIDONIA TARTARNEE, a little girl, who was accidentally killed on the night of the 4th inst. by falling from the roof of the four-story house No. 270 First-avenue to the sidewalk. It appears that the deceased in company with several others, was engaged in firing off roman candles and other fireworks, when she, in the act of letting one off, suddenly stepped backward two or three paces in the glee and excitement of the sport, until she came to the edge of the roof. There was no railing or other safeguard, and the consequence was the child fell headlong to the sidewalk below, killing her instantly. She was an only child, and by those who knew her well she is said to have been beautiful, talented and accomplished beyond her years. Though scarcely ten years of age, she was far advanced as a singer and player upon musical instruments, and had frequently performed with much éclat before large and highly respectable private assemblages. The jury rendered a verdict of accidental death.

A HOMICIDE IN BAXTER-STREET—A WOMAN BEATEN TO DEATH.—A woman named ELLEN KEARNS, about 45 years of age, and a native of Ireland, became involved in a quarrel with EDWARD MORAN, at a late hour on Saturday night, at No. 93 Baxter-street. During the affray, MORAN struck ELLEN several blows with his fist, which had the effect to knock her senseless to the ground. She was soon taken up by some of her friends, and conveyed to her bed, where she died in about an hour afterward. Coroner RANNEY held an inquest upon the body yesterday afternoon, when the jury rendered a verdict to the effect that the deceased came to her death by reason of injuries received at the hands of EDWARD MORAN. Immediately after the rendition of this verdict, the Coroner issued a warrant for his apprehension. It appears that the accused made his escape to some other locality immediately after the offence was committed.

BROADWAY FREE RELIGIOUS MEETINGS.—The Christian Alliance, of this City, inaugurated at the City Assembly Rooms, last evening, a series of Sunday free religious meetings. It is designed to afford to all, who traverse our great thoroughfare on Sunday morning or evening, an opportunity to enjoy, if only for a few moments, free religious worship. Some of our ablest City ministers have consented to take turns in conducting the services. The meeting, last night, was addressed by Dr. TYNG, who presided, Rev. Mr. WESTON, of Oliver-street Baptist Church, and Rev. C. Goss. The singing was led by Professor WILSON. The addresses were pithy and seemed greatly to interest the audience, which, considering the extreme heat and the limited notice, was quite large. It is to be hoped that some stray souls may be gathered into the flock by these Christian efforts. The large and well-ventilated room and the excellent singing, aside from the reputation of the speakers promised, ought to draw crowds.

A MAN ROBBED OF $100.—A bar-tender, aged nineteen years, named MICHAEL MCGUIRE, was brought before Justice KELLY, yesterday, charged with having stolen the sum of $100, in bills and gold, from the person of PETER DEMPSEY, of No. 491 Third-avenue, at an early hour yesterday morning. From testimony given before the Magistrate, it seems that there was a general fight on the corner of Third-avenue and Thirty-sixth street, between the complainant, the prisoner, and two other parties. That during the strife, DEMPSEY'S pocket was cut, and the money taken from it. The whole amount was afterwards found upon the person of the prisoner. The latter was held to bail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

BROADWAY MEETING.—The Christian Alliance of this City have leased the premises known as the "City Assembly Rooms," on Broadway, for stated services upon the Sabbath. The various meetings for the benefit of young men, workingmen and others, will hereafter be held at this place. The inauguration services will take place this evening. Rev. Drs. TYNG, THOMPSON, WESTON, Goss and others will take part in the exercises.

DROWNED WHILE BATHING.—A boy seven years of age, named CHAS. NIXON, whose parents reside at No. 148 Orchard-street, was drowned yesterday, while bathing in the East River at the foot of Fifty-first-street. The body was not recovered.

ANOTHER DROWNING CASE.—FLORENCE SULLIVAN, aged 18 years, employed by the Erie Railroad Company, on board of a barge, accidentally fell into the water at the foot of North Moore-street, yesterday, and was drowned. Coroner RANNEY held an inquest upon the body.

MONDAY, July 7—A. M.

The anxious and feverish condition of the public mind through the past week, from the conflicting, though generally depressing advices, from the army, interfered materially with Trade and Financial affairs. For a day or two, confidence appeared to be much shaken in Wall-street, the alarm being first taken by a number of our Bank officers, and some few of the private Bankers, who, in suddenly calling in their temporary loans, communicated the panic feeling to the Stock Exchange. This condition of things, however, only continued, in its worst aspect, for a single day—Thursday—being sensibly relieved at the close of that day by better news from MCCLELLAN, and also on Saturday, by the assured safety of his army in its new position on the James River. Although the anxiety on the Corn Exchange, and among our Merchants generally, was equally great, there was less disturbance to business, and a fair amount of Export Clearances in Domestic Produce is reported, together with another large shipment of Bullion. The latter, amounting to $2,647,000, was more than supplied from the Sub-Treasury, leaving the sum total in Bank considerably above the average of the previous week. The Bullion brought rather better prices on this export demand than the week before, whereas the American Stocks from London, for which part of it was remitted, were sold cheaper to our own people. As intimated, in our last weekly review, the operation is not an undesirable one, at a time when, under the general suspension of Specie payments, and with a Government currency in which the people of this country have confidence, there is no better practical use to which our Bullion can be applied. Most of the Stocks coming out from the other side are 5@6 ₩ cent. Government Securities, and 7@8 ₩ cent. sound Railway Mortgages, for which there is a constant domestic demand, at about present rates.

The new Tariff bill has gone to the Senate without material amendment. The Warehousing system is practically reduced to one year. The enhanced duties are made applicable to all goods in bond and on shipboard on the 1st August. The chances are that the bill will pass the Senate without amendment in either respect, and the importers here are generally withdrawing their goods from bond, to avail of the existing duties.

The new Treasury bill is in Committee of Conference between the two Houses—the Representatives having disagreed to the amendments of the Senate. One of these, to fix the reserve of the new Circulation at $75,000,000, instead of one-third of the Deposits in the Treasury, will probably be receded from by the Senate; while another, to fix the limit of Notes under five dollars at $25,000,000, may be agreed to by the House. The bill will be perfected and go to the President in the course of the present week.

The Import entries are moderate for the first week in July. The interruption by the War excitement on Thursday and the holiday on Friday, no doubt caused part of the reduction in the entries. The Customs paid during the five business days amount to $954,000.

The ultimate decline on the Stock Exchange, as compared with the prices of Saturday week, is equal to 2 ₩ cent. on Government 6 ₩ cents., and 3 ₩ cent. on New-York Central shares; other Stocks falling down in about the same proportion. The price of Money is more generally settled at 6 ₩ cent. than at 5 ₩ cent., though considerable transactions are still made on Government and Northern State Securities at the lower figure. The market was much disturbed on Thursday by the War panic, but more with reference to the margins upon Stock loans than the scarcity of supply. On Saturday the Brokers made but few complaints on either point. The price of Gold which fell to 108¾ ₩ cent. on Monday, rose on Thursday to 110¼@110⅝, and fell

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

Gen. MCCLELLAN'S Address to his soldiers, published in the Times this morning, does not read like the bulletin of a defeated General. On the contrary, he congratulates his men on the fact that they have executed a successful move-ment in the face of the enemy; and that they have saved all their material, all their trains, and all their guns except a few lost in battle—taking in return guns and colors from the enemy. He further announces that he is now fully prepared for the enemy, who will find, when they again attack him, that their repulse will be converted into a final defeat. Richmond, he says, shall be entered by the "Army of the Potomac."

The rebel gunboat Teazer, we learn from Fortress Monroe, was captured on Friday, in one of the bends of James River. Very important papers were found on board.

The battles of Monday and Tuesday last, finishing up the series lasting through seven days, satisfied the rebels that all attempts to overcome the Army of the Potomac would be in vain, and since Tuesday night, as we learn by the latest dispatches from Gen. MCCLELLAN to the War Department, there has been no fighting. The fighting on the last two days was of the most terrific character, and the defeat of the rebels was most complete. Even the Richmond Examiner acknowledges that the rebel army was repulsed on Monday, and that it suffered most terribly in killed and wounded; aad its defeat on Tuesday, as we learn from our own dispatches, was even more decided—the gunboats playing an important part, and carrying havoc into the rebel ranks with their heavy shells. Seventeen of our gunboats are now in the James River, protecting the flanks of our army. Gen. MCCLELLAN states that our forces have not been beaten in any conflict, and that they could not be driven from the field by the uttermost efforts of the enemy. No guns have been lost since the engagement of Friday, the 27th ult., when Gen. MCCALL'S Division was overwhelmed at the commencement of the battle of Gaines' Hill, and some twenty-five pieces fell into the hands of the enemy. A correct statement of our losses in killed, wounded and missing cannot yet be given, and the estimates vary from fifteen to twenty thousand. We have in our hands less than a thousand rebel prisoners, though many more were captured, but released during the movement to the James River.

The present position of our army is one that not only insures its safety, but is admirably adapted to future operations upon Richmond, when it shall have been sufficiently strengthened to renew offensive operations. Forming an arc of a circle, one point rests upon the James River, nearly opposite Fort Darling, and the other touches it at Harrison's Bar—making a front of eight or ten miles. The ground is slightly rolling, with a considerable elevation about a mile from the river, from whence it gradually slopes to the water's edge. The entire rear of the army is thoroughly defended and rendered safe from attack in that quarter by the James and the gunboats which rest on its favoring bosom. Directly in front, at the point nearest Richmond, the White Oak Swamp and Creek form a protecting barrier; while a ridge of hills, at whose base runs Turkey Creek, skirted by marshy land on each side, interposes to render approach upon our extreme further wing difficult if not impracticable. For the whole distance, moreover, the gunboats are within range of the outskirts of our lines nearest the enemy, who, profiting by the experience of Tuesday, are unlikely to renew the fighting where they are to be exposed to those dreaded adversaries.

A gentleman who came from the James River in the steamship Daniel Webster, which arrived at this port yesterday morning, represents the army of Gen. MCCLELLAN in good spirits, eager for reinforcements, and anxious for another chance at the rebels. The men are rapidly getting rested from their seven days' fighting, and trying to wash off some of the Virginia mud. The Daniel Webster left Harrison's Bar, on the James River, on Friday at 1 o'clock, making the run to this City in 30 hours. The army has great confidence in Gen. MCCLELLAN, and, as well as the enemy, praise the masterly manner in which our movement to the James was conducted. Our gunboats are continually flying up and down the river, shelling suspicious places, and preventing the too near approach of the rebels. The river is filled with boats of all kinds carrying reinforcements and supplies to the army. There was a rumor that Gen. BURNSIDE had appeared on the other side of the river, but our informant thinks it will be some time before an advance can be made.

A brief dispatch from New-Madrid, dated Saturday, announces that "Vicksburgh is ours." No particulars are yet received.

The Secretary of War received on Friday the following dispatches from the Mississippi fleets:

UNITED STATES FLAGSHIP HARTFORD;

Hon. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy:

The fleet passed up above Vicksburgh this morning, and engaged the batteries while passing, but received their rolling fire as soon as we passed. I have communicated with Gen. THAYER and Commander DAVIS. A. G. FARRAGUT, Flag-Officer.

VIA MEMPHIS, July 2, 1862.

To Hon. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy:

I have arrived at Island No. 76, and am in communication with Flag-Officer FARRAGUT.

C. H. DAVIS, Flag-Officer.

Gen. HALLECK telegraphs to the War Department that on the 1st inst. Col SHERIDAN, of the First Michigan Cavalry, with two regiments of 728 men, was attacked near Booneville by parts of eight rebel regiments, numbering about 4,700 men. He defeated and drove them back, after seven hours' fighting, during which he lost only 41 men killed, wounded and missing, while the enemy left 65 dead on the field.

Two steam transports have arrived at this port from Port Royal—the Ocean Queen on Friday, and the Arago on Saturday. There is very little news. Our troops had evacuated James Island and returned to Port Royal. Among the passengers by the Arago were eighty wounded officers, non-commissioned officers and privates.

Gen. SHIELDS has not resigned, and has no intention of resigning. Accompanied by a portion of his Staff, he is for the present in New-York, in obedience to the orders of the President. He has been assigned the important duty of aiding in organizing and training, for immediate service, the new quota of volunteers.

For the early and reliable lists of sick and wounded arriving at Fortress Monroe, which we are in the habit of presenting to our readers, we have to acknowledge the facilities kindly thrown in the way of our correspondent there, not only by Dr. CUYLER, the able medical Director of that Department, but his polite and indefatigable assistant, Mr. VALENTINE M. SILVA.

CONGRESS.

The Senate was in session about half an hour on Friday, but did no business of importance. In the Senate on Saturday, a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for the reports of Col. CANBY, relative to operations in New-Mexico, was adopted. The bill to abolish certain posts of delivery in the Mississippi Valley was passed. A bill for the collection of the revenue on the Northern, Northeastern and Northwestern frontiers was passed. The bill making appropriation for the payment of certain bounties was passed. The other business done was principally of local interest.

In the House, Mr. WICKLIFFE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which Gen. HUNTER'S reply to the inquiries relative to his black soldiers, was ordered to be printed, and made a speech in denunciation of the policy of arming the blacks. This gave rise to a long debate, at the close of which Mr. WICKLIFFE'S motion was negatived. The Senate's amendments to the Treasury Note bill were rejected, and a Committee of Conference was ordered. The Senate's joint resolution designating the first Tuesday in September as the day of meeting, at Chicago, of the Corporators under the Pacific Railroad act, was passed. A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish clothing to wounded and other soldiers who have lost theirs by the casualties of war, was passed. The bill prohibiting the confinement of soldiers in the District of Columbia, excepting for certain crimes, and discharging those now in confinement, was passed. The Secretary of War was called upon to inform the House whether any member of Congress has been interested in contracts since the 1st of April last. The House soon afterward adjourned.

GENERAL NEWS.

The National Anniversary was celebrated on Friday with much spirit and enthusiasm, not only in this locality, but in every place from which we have received advices.

By the arrival off Cape Race of the steamship Hibernian, we have advices from Europe to the 27th inst. The news is important. It is asserted that the French Emperor has resolved to send to Mexico sufficient troops to force a way to the Capital against all obstacles. A large number of French war vessels are to be concentrated in American waters, to be commanded by Admiral GRAVIERE. The excuse for this movement is the fear of what may arise out of the war in the United States and Mexican affairs. The sales of cotton in the Liverpool market for the week had been 159,000 bales, and the market was much excited, prices having advanced 1d.@1½d. per pound. Breadstuffs were quiet and steady, and provisions dull. American securities were dull, with a downward tendency. Consols were quoted at 91¾@91⅞ for money.

The Cunard steamer Africa, which was seriously injured, as was supposed, by striking an iceberg off Cape Race, was four days in the dry-dock at Charlestown, Mass., for repairs, and during this time she had 84 feet of the lower depth of her keel taken out and replaced, her sternpost repaired at its junction with the keel, over 130 feet of shoe or false keel put on, several planks taken out and others put in their places, and a new rudder made. All the castings upon the sternpost were replaced by others, and the entire braces upon the rudder were also new. As she is very strongly built of the most durable materials, it was exceedingly difficult to cut away the damaged parts to make space for the new. Her keel is teak, her planking English and African oak, and the sheathing American elm, although bolted with copper. The planking on her bottom is 6½ inches thick, covered with 3½ inches thickness of American elm, which is sheathed with felt and copper.

The following additional Aides-de-Camp attached to the Staff of Maj.-Gen. FREMONT, and recently doing duty on his personal Staff, were discharged from the service on the 30th ult., viz: Cols. Anselme Albert, John T. Field, Albert Noey, J. P. C. Shanks, Robert N. Hudson, Charles Zagonyi, E. Cheseret, Philip Figyelmesy, William J. Reynolds, and Amos B. Jones; Lieut.-Cols. Augustus F. Schwer, John Pilsen, and James W. Savage; Majors Richard M. Corwine, Theodore J. Weed, Augustus Hain, D. Henry Burtnete, Adolf Carisson, Burr Porter, Franz Krappner, Leonidas Haskell, and Edward Detshy; Captains John R. Howard, Rossiter W. Raymond, John C. Hopper, Jacob Von Cederstron, Cansky Sauer de Nordendorf, Cyrus Hamlin, Geo. Ward Nichols, Augustus Backx, Josepe Gruwe, Albert G. Sloo, Jr., Edward P. Brownson, and C. S. Szabat.

The New-York Christian Alliance commenced, at the City Assembly Rooms, last evening a series of Sunday religious meetings, to be continued in that place. Rev. Dr. TYNG presided, Prof. WILSON led the singing, and addresses was made by Dr. TYNG, Rev. Mr. WESTON, of Oliver-street Baptist Church, and Rev. C. GOSS. The audience, though not large, was attentive, and deeply interested in the exercises.

There was a much improved confidence on the Stock Exchange on Saturday, and prices recovered to 101¼ for United States 6 39 cents, and 90¼@91 for Central. Gold, 109¾. Exchange, 121¼. Gold shipments of the day, $2,500,000; for whole week, $2,647,000.

A fair demand prevailed on Saturday for the principal kinds of Breadstuffs; prices of Flour and Wheat favored sellers, while Corn closed heavily. A moderate business was transacted in Provisions, including Pork, which was decidedly lower. Cotton was in request, as were also Hay, Hops, Hides, Leather and Tallow, at uniform quotations. Whisky was depressed and declining. Sugars were pretty actively sought after. The freight engagements were less extensive. The changes in other branches of trade were unimportant. Many merchants left the City on Thursday last, not to return until the following Monday, and business movements were consequently restricted.

VICKSBURGH.—Our advices from Vicksburgh are not very lucid. The first dispatch from the Southwest announced with Cæsarian brevity, that "Vicksburgh is ours;" but the subsequent dispatches of Saturday, dated at Cairo, though in many more words, did not tend to confirm the literal correctness of the first report. They spoke of the town having suffered greatly from the bombardment which had been opened upon it by Commodore FARRAGUT, and further announced that "seven hundred more shells had been ordered from New-Orleans to reduce the place to ashes." The dispatch also stated that Gen. BUTLER had ordered five thousand negroes to go to work and change the channel of the Mississippi River at Vicksburgh, that so the contumacious place might be transformed into an inland town. It may be that all these statements are correct, though how BUTLER communicated his orders to the bombarding fleet does not appear; and whether it would have been necessary to have done all these things if the place was ours, is quite problematical. Altogether, the chances at present seem to be that Vicksburgh is not yet literally ours.

Our Army Before Richmond—Causes of the Recent Reverse.

The first necessity of every community, after a disaster, is a scapegoat. It is an immense relief to find some one upon whom can be fastened all the sins of a whole people, and who can then be sent into the wilderness, to be heard of no more forever. Of course, we have a very active search for such a scapegoat now. The reverse in front of Richmond is a serious affair, and until somebody has been made to suffer for it, the country will not feel safe. When somebody's head is off, it matters not much whose, we shall all breathe freer. The Post insists that Gen. MCCLELLAN shall be the victim. The World censures the President. The Herald falls foul of Secretary STANTON; and the Tribune, tired for once of its own denunciations, or having long since exhausted the list, contents itself with calling for help on Gen. HUNTER and his negro brigades.

We see little good likely to come of all this. What the country needs, is courage and a new army,—not criminations or criticisms of any kind. Indeed, if we had had less of these hitherto, we might have less provocation for them now. The great cause of our weakness has been dissensions in Congress, in the Cabinet, and in the Press concerning the merits of different Generals, and the wisdom of different policies. In carrying on a war, the one thing needful is confidence in the Government and its agents. Whatever strengthens this aids the common cause; whatever and whoever weakens it, inflicts upon that cause a blow which may be fatal.

It is very easy, now that the affair is over, to perceive the cause of MCCLELLAN'S recent reverse. At the last moment, when least expected, and equally to the surprise, we have no doubt, of President LINCOLN, Secretary STANTON, and Gen. MCCLELLAN himself, Stonewall JACKSON rushed from the Valley of the Shenandoah, attacked with 50,000 men our right wing of 20,000, forced it back and got in rear of our whole army, without weakening the rebel force massed in front of it by a single man. No General on earth could make head against such a coup de guerre. If MCCLELLAN had stood his ground and fought in such a position, nothing in the world could have prevented the utter annihilation of the army of the Potomac. That he saved the army against such odds and under such circumstances, and that he has been able to place it upon a new base of operations from which he may renew his attack upon the rebel Capital with increased chances of success, affords such proof of consummate generalship as few living soldiers can show.

Gen. MCCLELLAN was not taken by surprise in an attack on his right wing. He foresaw it, and had prepared for it. He knew that it was the weakest part of his line, and that as it was the only cover for his communications, it offered very strong temptations for an attack. His army was not large enough to cover the whole of his long line. He called over and over again for reinforcements to enable him to do so,—but he could not get them. The Government had none to spare. While the rebels can concentrate their forces upon a single point, we are under the fatal necessity of covering a dozen. JACKSON was ravaging the Valley of the Shenandoah, and menacing Maryland and the Capital. EWELL had joined him with all his force. The Government naturally hesitated about incurring a danger which came close home to it, by sending away its troops to guard against one which seemed remote and doubtful. The strength of the rebels at Richmond, moreover, was studiously underrated. Predictions were freely uttered that it would vanish when approached—that their numbers would prove to be less than those of MCCLELLAN'S army, and that he could very well take care of himself. All these things had their effect. They begat in the public mind an undue confidence in our force, and a corresponding impatience of demands for more troops. The bloody battles of Seven Pines and Fair Oaks shook this a little, but only for a time, and it was then too late to create a new army for that campaign.

MCCLELLAN was not deceived, but he was helpless. He knew that the rebels outnumbered him: and in every war, other things being equal or nearly so, the chances of victory rest wth the army which has the highest numbers. He was compelled, therefore, to rely on skill,—on preparation, and in the last resort, on strategy. He knew that his right wing was likely to be attacked and beaten. But he believed that this could only be done by a superior force, and that this force must be drawn from the rebel right. If the enemy strengthened his own left, he would in the same ratio weaken his right wing,—and over his right wing lay the road to Richmond. MCCLELLAN, therefore, prepared his own right wing for a prompt and safe retreat to the other side of the Chickahominy,—prepared the White House for a prompt and cheap surrender, and prepared his left wing for a prompt and overwhelming advance. He had massed there the main body of his army, and nearly all his artillery,—had caused roads to be opened, causeways constructed, and every preparation made for advancing cannon, and stood ready to avail himself, at an hour's notice, of the expected transfer of the rebel strength from one side to the other of his lines. He expected to exchange the White House for Richmond, and the bargain was a good one.

Upon this basis MCCLELLAN'S plans were faultless. But they took it for granted that he would have to meet only the army which held Richmond. MCDOWELL, BANKS and FREMONT were expected to detain JACKSON in the Valley of the Shenandoah. Scarcely a week before the crisis came, President LINCOLN himself informed MCCLELLAN that 15,000 men had been sent from Richmond to reinforce JACKSON, and that this was equivalent to adding just so many to MCCLELLAN'S army. No one thought for a moment that JACKSON was to leave the Valley. His whole mission was supposed to be to prevent reinforcements from being sent to MCCLELLAN. He did this—and a good deal more. For when the attack upon our right wing came, it proved to have been made by JACKSON himself. He had swept down with 55,000 men past Hanover Court-House,—forced our right across the Chickahominy, and was ready to follow them, while the rebel force in front of our left stood there in undiminished strength! In a single day JACKSON had added 55,000 men to the rebel Richmond army. MCDOWELL had done for MCCLELLAN precisely what PATTERSON did for MCDOWELL before Bull Run. JACKSON had played our army in front of Washington precisely the same trick which JOHNSON last year played our army at Winchester. He had quit his position, and fallen upon our force before MCDOWELL knew that he was gone.

MCCLELLAN was thus placed in a condition of the utmost peril, from which extrication might seem almost impossible. He had the enemy in overwhelming numbers in front, on his right, and rapidly gaining his rear. The sudden resolution which he took, of throwing his whole army over narrow and difficult roads, in face of a powerful, vigorous and exultant enemy, upon a new base of operations twenty miles away, will stand as one of the boldest military conceptions ever formed:—while the success with which it was achieved, the steadiness and order of this terrible march, and the admirable behavior of these raw troops, who have not been a year under arms, and most of whom had never been under fire, challenge for the Commanding General and for his officers and men the hearty admiration of the whole country. Pursued by the enemy and forced to face about and fight desperate battles on successive days, GEN. MCCLELLAN took away in safety all his stores, drove along all his cattle, preserved nearly all his guns, and took up a new position upon a new line of communication with his supplies, from which the most strenuous efforts of the enemy have failed to drive him.

Thanks to the generalship and the courage of his soldiers, the Army of the Potomac is safe. It only remains now to strengthen and sustain it. We must not expect any very speedy movement upon Richmond, for the Army is not in condition to make it. But the ranks of that army must be filled up. The terrible gaps which battle and disease have made in its heroic columns must be stopped. It is not now a question of generalship, nor of political sagacity—it is one of strength. It can do no good to depose Generals, or dismiss Cabinet officers. Those we have are fully adequate to the emergency, if they are only sustained by the confidence and energy of the nation. It is impossible for an Administration to be faultless, or to escape much just censure, in the midst of responsibilities and labors such as now surround our Government. But it is equally impossible to charge an Administration with every failure on its part to fulfill the expectations of an eager public.

The Crisis of the War—Appeal to Radicals and Conservatives.

Up to the present moment, this great Republic has been fighting the rebellion of the Southern States with not a moiety of its strength, and with divided counsels. Not because the loyal people do not feel patriotic—not because they are indifferent to the result of the contest—not because they do not earnestly desire the restoration of the Union and a return to the blessings of peace. All these sentiments are fervently entertained by the loyal millions of the nation. But what our people do lack is a just appreciation of the magnitude of the work before them, and of the absolute necessity of entire harmony, and of the quick, active and resolute coöperation of all classes in the support of the war.

The great matter in hand is fighting—and fighting only. The questions, what we are going to do with the rebels or with the property of the rebels after the war is over, is wholly irrelevant and untimely. And yet these ulterior matters have been receiving more attention from Congress and from some of our military men, and from the Press of the country, than the far more material and pressing issue, how shall we crush the rebellion and reduce the revolted States to the Constitution and laws. Parties are actually springing up in our midst to promote one policy or the other in regard to the management of the insurgent districts after they shall be subjected to the Union sway. One party is styled "Radicals," and they demand a law for the enfranchisement of slaves and the confiscation of all property of rebels. The discussion, much less the pressing of such measures on the nation while the war rages undetermined, is the vagary of fanaticism. The old pleasantry of the Cook-Book, on the proper mode of serving up a hare, has more common sense in it. "First catch your hare," says that eminent authority. And so of the proper disposition of rebels and rebel property. First catch your rebels—first possess their States—then it will be time to determine what to do with them and theirs. We are discussing how we shall administer on their effects. We are foolishly constituting ourselves executors of living men. We propose to take their goods and lands and sell them. But we find, on looking into the facts of the case, that they are standing guard over their effects with guns in their hands, and that we have not yet been able to disarm them. Then what the need of policies concerning such matters? Will a rebel fight less earnestly if he be duly informed, by act of Congress, that if we succeed in driving him from his State we will deprive his wife and his children of their homes and their means of livelihood, and turn them out as beggars upon the world? Then away, for the present, with confiscation bills! Their agitation does no good, but divides the sentiment of the loyal States, and to that extent impairs the national energy.

But not less harmful is the course of the other faction in our midst, styled "Conservatives." They hold vast meetings, and utter labored harangues to show that [illegible] is the duty of our Government toward conquered rebels. We must grant "amnesty to the masses," and only punish "the leaders." We must abstain from Confiscation; we must restore the rebels to their constitutional and their State rights—and so on to the end of the chapter. These dubious utterances fall with a chilling effect upon the nation in its travail. They indicate a sympathy in the wrong direction and at the wrong time. What! Talk of magnanimity to rebels—"constitutional rights" of rebels—when they are leaping like bloodhounds at the throat of the nation—when they are slaughtering the sons of loyal fathers and mothers by tens of thousands under their disloyal banners? These suggestions, falling upon the popular ear at this hour of revenge and anxiety, seem too near akin to treason to be received with any feelings but those of disgust, that will speedily mount to burning indignation.

Can we not be rid for a season of the rival policies of Conservatives and Radicals in regard to the status of rebel States and their citizens at the end of the war? Let us wait till we see the end of the war before we consider what is then to be done. We must fight—fight perhaps often—always fearfully, before we shall be prepared to punish the leaders of the rebellion or dispose of their estates. And this fighting is the first and only thing in order. Punishment of treason is not limited by time. We can punish this month, or next month, or next year. Justice will not lose its vigor by delay. But crushing the rebellion cannot be put off. It must be done now or never. Will not our Congress see it? Will not our loyal papers see it? Will not "Radicals" and "Conservatives" see it? Then, in Heaven's name, a truce to policies and parties, and an earnest rush to the nation's rescue. Delay will be fatal to republican liberty; and with the loss of this Government will perish our institutions, our protection and our property. All will go down together in the abyss of bankruptcy, revolution and social perdition.

The Government has called for 300,000 men to complete the work our present army has so nobly begun. It would have been better and cheaper in the end, we think, to have called for 500,000, and to have had them in the field in sixty days. They must be had—and there must be no delay—for in delay there is danger, and in delay there is ruin.

Let us have war in earnest, and no more debates. Lay everything on the table, and look to the field of battle as the only arena on which our Government, and our rights and franchises under it, are to be maintained. If this be not done—and done freely and cordially by Conservatives and Radicals, and all classes of the people, then shall we lose, in all probability, the right to discuss our own national destiny in any forum, and the ability to contest on any field.

The Mexican Imbroglio.

Our Washington dispatches of this morning state that official advices of the refusal of the English Government to ratify the Convention recently entered into between the English Commissioners and the Mexican Government have been received. In this connection, on the 19th June ult., Earl RUSSELL, in his remarks in the House of Lords, said:

"It has been stated in the public prints that a Convention has been entered into by Sir CHARLES WYKE and Commodore DUNLOP on the one side, and the Mexican Government on the other, by which the British claims on Mexico will be satisfied, and that the Convention has been ratified by Her Majesty's Government. As to the first part, it is true that a Convention has been signed by Sir CHARLES WYKE and Commodore DUNLOP, and it has been sent home for ratification. The arrangement contemplated for the satisfaction of British claims was fair and liberal, but we found that Convention referred to another Covention between Mexico and the United States; and fearing that it might involve this country in difficulties, Her Majesty's Government decided not to ratify it."

It has been stated that in this convention with England, the Mexican Government stipulated to pay to English bondholders, one quarter of all the moneys received under any treaty made with this Government; and as a whole, the convention is very favorable to English interests so far as pecuniary claims are concerned.

The shallowness of the excuse for the non-ratification of the convention given by Earl RUSSELL, must be apparent to any one who will take the trouble to look at the subject closely. From all accounts, it appears that a perfect understanding existed between our Minister, Mr. CORWIN, and Sir CHARLES WYKE; and both the convention entered into by Sir CHARLES WYKE on the part of England, and the treaty negotiated by Mr. CORWIN on the part of the United States, were so framed as to harmonize in their practical operation. We see nothing, therefore, to sustain the declaration of Earl RUSSELL that the ratification of the English and Mexican Convention by the English Government might lead to difficulties with the United States.

The real cause of the non-ratification of that Convention is, doubtless, the fear of unfortunate complications with France, now fairly at war with Mexico. There are Sir CHARLES WYKE and M. SALIGNY, one representing the interests of England and the other the interests of France in Mexico. These two European officials are at swords' points, and working at cross purposes. Sir CHARLES WYKE, full of rancorous feelings toward M. SALIGNY, and, in order to head him off, hurries up a convention with the Mexican Government. The English Government refuses to sustain Sir CHARLES WYKE, and urges NAPOLEON to pursue his designs in Mexico, thus virtually sustaining M. SALIGNY against its own representative. This state of affairs is quite extraordinary, and shows what vast complications our own national troubles have originated.

As matters now stand, it does not appear that at present any treaty stipulations between Mexico and the United States, or between Mexico and the European Powers, will be ratified and carried into effect.

That the attempt, on the part of LOUIS NAPOLEON, to subjugate the Mexican nation and overthrow the Constitutional Government must eventually result most disastrously to the French Empire, we firmly believe. The French Princes scent from afar the danger that attends the movements of their enemy and successful rival, and they are going to Cleremont to watch and wait.

A WORD TO MESSRS. WICKLIFFE AND MALLORY—WHAT THE FOREFATHERS THOUGHT OF THE MILITARY CAPACITY OF THE BLACKS.—It is perhaps too much to expect of our enlightened Congressmen that they shall inform themselves of what their predecessors in the National Legislature thought and said on subjects they are now discussing. If they would take this trouble, however, it would often, certainly, save a great deal of time that might be otherwise better employed. For instance, the House of Representatives consumed the best part of Saturday last in debating the military capacity of the Blacks. Now, this whole question was thoroughly discussed in the very first Congress held in 1790; and if the honorable members had taken the pains to consult their files of GALES & SEATON, they might have saved themselves a good deal of pulmonary exercitation, without leaving the country any less wise than it was before. The using of the Blacks is a question of practical policy which may or may not be adopted, as exigencies shall demand; but speculations on the military capacity of the negroes are abstractions that can lead to nothing. Meanwhile, we commend to Messrs. WICKLIFFE, MALLORY & Co., who think "negroes are naturally afraid of guns," and that "one shot from a cannon would disperse thirty thousand of them," the views of another Southern member some seventy-two years ago. Mr. SMITH, member from South Carolina, in the House of Representatives 1790, in the course of an elaborate debate on the question, said:

"Negroes, it was said, would not fight; but he would ask whether it was owing to their being black, or to their being slaves? If to their being black, then emancipating them would not remedy the evil, for they would still remain black; if it was owing to their being slaves, he denied the position; for it was an undeniable truth that in many countries slaves made excellent soldiers. * * Had experience proved that the negroes would not make good soldiers? He did not assert that they would, but they had never been tried. Discipline was everything; white militia made but indifferent soldiers before they were disciplined. It was well known that, according to the present art of war, a soldier was a mere machine, and he did not see why a black machine was not as good as a white one; and in one respect the black troops would have the advantage—in appearing more horrible in the eyes of the enemy."

IS WASHINGTON SAFE?—If "Stonewall" JACKSON be not dead—and there is now a doubt thrown over the statement that he was veritably and actually killed in the late battles—is there no danger of his taking a column, and with it marching suddenly in the direction of Washington? The movements of this daring rebel, during the last two months, have been as rapid and successful as they have been extraordinary in other respects. It is but a few weeks since he pounced upon and defeated the forces of MILROY and SCHENCK, in the Shenandoah Valley. From that work he entered upon the pursuit of Gen. BANKS, drove him to Winchester, defeated him there, pursued him a distance of seventy or eighty miles up to the Potomac; then retired, and during his retreat defeated FREMONT and SHIELDS; then swept over the Blue Ridge and across Eastern Virginia to the Chickahominy, and attacked the right wing of our main army ten days ago—with what success is known to our readers—having in this brief space of time fought four battles at distant points, and traversed a distance of four or five hundred miles. In each of the instances his movement was more or less of a surprise, and each of them would have been declared by most men quite impossible before it was actually done. It would undoubtedly be a difficult thing for JACKSON, whether he be or be not dead, to take twenty thousand rebels and move north to Fredericksburgh, thence to Manassas, thence eastward to the Potomac; and it is not likely he will try. We believe, moreover, that our troops now at Washington and the points named are fully prepared to resist such a movement. At least we hope so. And we also hope, that now that it is known that JACKSON'S forces are at Richmond, our troops in the Shenandoah Valley and elsewhere in Eastern Virginia, will be so disposed of as to effectually prevent any other northward movements of this rebel, if he be alive, or of his ghost, if he be dead.

THE VALOR OF OUR OFFICERS.—We hear nothing concerning our military officers during the late extraordinary series of battles but praises of their bravery and efficiency. In almost every instance they seem to have performed their whole duty, and performed it in a cool, unflinching, heroic manner, that was not surpassed by the display of the same qualities in the men. They shrunk from no danger, were ready to obey any orders, and made no mistakes. The mortality among them was very heavy, both in the regulars and volunteers—both among those officers appointed from civil life and those of a West Point training. The country gives full honor to these gallant officers, who during a year of quiet service and hard labor and drill, have not only brought their men, but have brought themselves, into that admirable moral, physical and military condition, which is essential to enable them to perform such deeds as are now recounted of them. Hundreds of those who have survived deserve promotion; and we hope that the different Commanders will hasten to give their names and their actions officially to the country, and that the President will hasten to confer upon them the well-earned rewards of merit.

The record of our officers now is very different from what it used to be in the early days of the war, and particularly in the engagements that were taking place in Virginia a year ago. Then there was a cry—all but universal, and doubtless often unjust—of cowardice, incapacity and drunkenness. In every skirmish, almost, some officer blundered or skulked, and the complaints from the body of the army and from the country were loud and deep. The greatness of the change between now and then is visible to every one. Let us give all honor to our brave officers of every grade!

EFFECTS OF THE HEAT.—Notwithstanding the intense heat of yesterday, only one serious casualty is reported as taking place. A little girl named LOUISA SHEARER, residing at No. 449 Fifth-st., died last evening from over-exertion in the heat. Deceased was twelve years of age.

SUNDAY ARRESTS.—Twenty-seven persons were arrested yesterday for violating the Sunday liquor law; thirty-two males and twenty-four females for intoxication, and twelve persons of both sexes for gambling. Of the latter three were boys.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

Suspension of the Order Dismissing Gen. Fremont's Staff.

THE NEW CALL FOR TROOPS.

ORDER RELATING TO PAROLED PRISONERS.

What the Rebels in Richmond Claim.

OPERATIONS OF THE NAVY.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 6.

THE NEW CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS.

There is much interest in Washington to hear the response of the country to the President's new call for volunteers. The prevailing sentiment is that the enlistments will be too slow to meet the public demand for an immediate and overwhelming advance upon the rebellion, and that a draft for a half million men would be the proper action at the present moment. No half-way measures, but one finishing blow.

IMPORTANT RELATING TO PAROLED PRISONERS.

The paragraph of the order of June 12, which authorizes the discharge, when requested by them, of paroled prisoners, is rescinded. No more furloughs will be granted to returned prisoners. All furloughs heretofore given them are hereby revoked, and all prisoners now at large on their parole, or who may hereafter be paroled by the rebel authorities, will immediately repair, if belonging to regiments raised in New-England and the Middle States, to the Camp of Instruction, established near Annapolis, Maryland; if belonging to regiments raised in Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, to Camp Chase, near Columbus, Ohio; if belonging to regiments raised in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and Missouri, to the camp near Jefferson Barracks, and report for such duty, compatible with their parole, as may be assigned to them by the officers in command of said camps; and all, whether officers or soldiers, who fail to comply with this order within the space of time necessary for them to do so will be accounted deserters, and dealt with accordingly. The commanders of the different camps of instruction to which paroled men are sent will have them organized into companies and battalions, keeping those of the same regiments and same States as much together as possible, &c.

GEN. FREMONT'S STAFF.

The special order, dated the 1st of July, discharging the Staff of Major-Gen. FREMONT, is suspended until further orders. This fact is officially proclaimed by the War Department.

THE WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

Large numbers of the invalids heretofore brought to Washington are convalescent. The mortality is small. The desire is widespread among the thousands of patients in this city to speedily recover and rejoin their respective regiments. They express the utmost confidence in, and the strongest attachment to all the general officers of the army of the Potomac. They are as patient in suffering as they were heroic on the field.

NEWS DIRECT FROM RICHMOND.

A Surgeon of a Wisconsin regiment who was captured at Bull Run, and has been kept in Richmond ever since, reached Washington this morning. He was taken out to the battle-fields before Richmond to help care for the wounded, but watched his opportunity and escaped. He says the rebel leaders claim a miraculous deliverance, and that every pane of glass in Richmond was illuminated in honor of their victory; but still the tone of the community was greatly saddened by reason of their frightful losses in battle.

IMPORTANT NAVAL MOVEMENTS.

The Navy Department has been officially informed that on the 15th ult., Lieut.-Commanding HOWELL, in the gunboat Tahoma, accompanied by Lieut.-Commanding ENGLISH, in the Somerset, crossed the bar of St. Marks River, and drove out a company of rebel artillery, with four or five field pieces, from a fort near the lighthouse, afterward landing and burning the fort, with the buildings used as barracks. This was good service against a nest of rebels who had captured two of the Kingfisher's boats, and were prepared for other mischief.

The armed schooner Beauregard has captured the English schooner Lucy, from Havana, for endeavoring to run the blockade on the Florida coast.

The steamer Somerset has captured the schooner Curlew, off Cedar Keys, Fla. She was from Havana.

The Somerset also surprised a steamer in Dead Man's Bay, loading with cotton. Before she could be reached, she was fired and deserted by her crew. Her anchors, cables, &c., were saved.

United States steamer Montgomery, off the Rio Grande, has captured the British schooner Will o' the Wisp, loaded with kegs of gunpowder in fish-barrels and in bags, percussion caps, thread, shoes, and a large case, or cases, marked "clothing."

The United States steamer Bienville captured, off Cape Fear, the schooner Morning Star, from Nassau, heading for Wilmington. She was loaded with salt, acids, cigars, &c.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

Official advices have been received here of the refusal of the English Government to ratify the Convention lately entered into between the English Commissioners and the Mexican Government. This destroys the principal argument urged in favor of the ratification of the Corwin Treaty, as Mexico is now free from the pledge which it is said she made to England of her landed securities, in case of their rejection by the United States.

ARTILLERY OFFICERS AT WEST POINT.

The artillery officers of the graduating class from West Point, excepting those retained for the Summer on duty at the Military Academy, will repair, without delay, to the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac, and report to Maj.-Gen. MCCLELLAN.

COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Ex-Gov. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, has been determined on as Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direct Tax bill. He will be nominated to the Senate probably to-morrow. His chief competitor for the place was Hon. JOSEPH J. LEWIS, of Westchester County, Pennsylvania. The salary of the office is $4,000.

ORDER RELATIVE TO SICK SOLDIERS, ET C.

According to an army order just issued, whenever sick men, paroled prisoners, or others under circumstances entitling them to their descriptive lists and accounts of pay and clothing, &c., are sent away from their regiments, or being already separated from their regiments, are descharged from any hospital, or moved from point to point in a body, they will be put under charge of a trusty officer or non-commissioned officer, to be selected if possible from their own numbers, who will exercise command over the parties, and conduct it to its destination; and to this officer, or non-commissioned officer will be confided the descriptive lists of all, for the safe-keeping of which, until properly turned over with each soldier, he will be held strictly accountable.

GEN. PRINCE.

Brig.-Gen. PRINCE, United States Volunteers, is released from duty with the Army of Virginia, and will report to Maj.-Gen. MCCLELLAN.

GEN. STURGIS.

Brig.-Gen. STURGIS is ordered to report to Maj.-Gen. POPE.

THE CASE OF DR. HAYES.

The Committee on the Conduct of the War, having made thorough investigation of the case of Dr. HAYES, lately dismissed from the army, by order of the Secretary of War, for neglect of duty, while engaged in transporting sick and wounded soldiers to Washington, are fully satisfied of the justice of his dismissal.

FUGITIVE SLAVES.

The question of the admission of fugitive slaves within the lines of the armies, is submitted to our Government for decision by Gens. BUTLER and PHELPS—BUTLER having opposed their admission, and PHELPS favored it. As they come of all ages and sexes, BUTLER objects to the expense of supporting them. The Government has given no decision, and it is thought will prescribe no rule, but still leave each Commander to judge the proper rule for his Department.

NOT KILLED.

Maj. PATTERSON, of the Sixty-second Pennsylvania; Col. MCQUADE, of the Fourteenth New-York, and Col. VAN WYCK, reported killed, are, it is said by gentlemen who arrived to-day from James River, alive.

A HOT DAY AND NO WAR RUMORS.

This has been the hottest day of the season, thermometer over ninety. No war rumors have disturbed the town.

AMUSEMENTS.

This week witnesses the cutting down to something like reasonable midsummer proportions the rage for managerial speculation which, for a short time past, has overwhelmed New-York with an embarrassment of theatrical riches.

Prof. ANDERSON, no longer able to endure the sultry oppression of the weather, closes the Winter Garden, and makes arrangements to reinvigorate his laurels in a more congenial climate.

Miss MARY PROVOST, likewise succumbing to the thermometer, becomes seriously indisposed, and announces an interregnum in her sway over the fortunes of the Olympic.

The FLORENCES at WALLACK'S, and Miss Maggie MITCHELL at LAURA KEENE'S, however, hold on to the chance which this diminishment of competition affords them, and will no doubt find their perseverance turn to profitable account.

A new comedietta, called "Orange Blossoms," was produced by the FLORENCES on Tuesday, and ought to have been repeated every night since; for it is an amusing, neatly put together, sparkling little piece, and met with a remarkably favorable reception. The principal parts in it were played by Mr. FLORENCE, Mr. DAVIDGE, Mr. J. R. BARRETT, Mrs. SKERRETT, Mrs. MYRON and Miss VIOLA CROCKER, all of whom were so good as to make special commendation of any one of them invidious. To-night Mr. FLORENCE revives "Dombey and Son," himself essaying Captain Cuttle; Mrs. FLORENCE, Susan Nipper; Mr. BARRETT, Toots; Mr. MARTIN, Bunsby; Mrs. SKERRETT, Edith; Miss WELLS, Mrs. Skewton; and Miss CROCKER, Florence Dombey.

After a successful career of four weeks "Fanchon, the Cricket," is withdrawn from Laura Keene's, and Miss MAGGIE MITCHELL appears in two new pieces—"The Young Prince; or Frolics of a King's Son," and "Katy O'Sheal." The former is another translation of the piece once presented here by Miss KEENE, under the name of "A Love of a Prince;" the latter is an Hibernian drama, wherein are songs and dances for Miss MITCHELL to bring down enthusiastic admiration from her audience with. Miss MITCHELL also warbles a bacchanalian lay in "The Young Prince," the chorus of which is expressive of a determination on the part of the jovial crew who sing it to "Wreathe the Bowl." Mr. A. H. DAVENPORT sustains Miss MITCHELL with his accustomed flow of spirits and versatile abilities as an actor; whilst Messrs. J. W. COLLIER, J. H. STODDART, Mrs. H. P. GRATTAN and Miss NELSON all have more or less to do.

At Niblo's, the administrative tact and meritorious performances, which have carried Miss CAROLINE RICHINGS through three months of uninterrupted triumph, still hold out to the public opportunities of entertainment that cannot be resisted. This evening the programme will be rendered more attractive than ever. LODER'S opera of "The Night Dancers," reduced to such musical dimensions as brings it within the range of a semi-operatic Company, is to be brought out with splendid new scenery and appointments, combined with all the fascinations of an unhackneyed, really piquant ballet. Miss RICHINGS, of course, is the Giselle, the music of which part is admirably suited to her voice and method; Mr. PETER RICHINGS has a suitable character in it; and ANNETTA GALLETTI leads a bevy of saltatory sylphs through the bewildering mazes of the dance. To console the crowds that so many things delightful to behold and hear are sure to bring together, it is but fair to once more call attention to the fact that Niblo's is in reality a "Garden;" that it has fountains, cool retreats, and every facility within its own precincts for the procuring of all manner of refreshments.

It is utterly impossible to say anything particularly novel about NIXON'S Cremorne Gardens. Everybody admits that it is the most enjoyable place in the City at which to spend either an afternoon or the hours between sundown and bedtime. What more can be said? The Gardens are lovely; the performances rather better than anything of the kind ever before attempted; the general direction of the place a compound of the most generous enterprise, the most refined, good taste, and the most untiring energy. Matinées, principally for the benefit of ladies and children, are given every day. This week the magnificent Cubas introduces a new and particularly ravishing ballet of the Andalusian order. Day and evening, she and THELEUR and WIETHOFF achieve apparent terpsichorean impossibilities; charming CARLOTTA PATTI, Madame STRAKOSCH and Signor ARDAVANI give us music as good as we can hear at the Academy of Music; and Madame TOURNAIRE, with a chosen band of equestrians and acrobats, obliges us with the highest class of circus evolutions. The public cannot expect more than this; and the public proves it is satisfied with what is already provided by patronizing Mr. NIXON to more than the utmost extent of his most sanguine anticipations.

Mr. BARNUM announces the commencement of a regular Summer season, to-day, at the Museum. He drops the heavier school of dramatic performances in the lecture-room, and substitutes a lighter species of entertainment. He has for this purpose engaged the Holman National Troupe, who appear in songs and musical interludes, and also in the entire opera of "Cinderella." Notwithstanding the warmth of the weather, the American Lambert and the Beautiful Fat Girl remain on exhibition, and do not seem to have lost a pound of their immense proportions. But the most comfortable of Mr. BARNUM'S curiosities must be the Learned Seal, who splashes about in a nice cold bath all the time.

Mr. HENRY WOOD, long known and justly popular as the manager of Wood's Ethiopian Minstrels, opens, for the first time, to-night, a new hall, which he has built and handsomely fitted up on the site occupied by Nos. 561 and 563 Broadway. The place is thus officially described: "An entrance of 25 feet in width, after running back to a distance of 80 feet, suddenly expands into a magnificent hall, 100 feet square, with a ceiling 75 feet in height. This immense area contains a parquette and two tiers of boxes, and beside the perfect ventilation under the roof, it has on both sides immense windows reaching from pit to dome, by means of which the whole building, if necessary, may be flooded with a current of fresh air. Indeed, there is almost as much open space as there is solid wall to this portion of the building when the windows are all thrown open. This, all will admit, is a great improvement; but the hall has another peculiarity, which every frequenter of public amusements will hail with unqualified satisfaction. This peculiarity is, that there are no side boxes. The two tiers of boxes describe a half circle, and are so constructed that from any point in the auditorium, either below or above, a full and complete view of the stage may be obtained. Added to all this, the law of acoustics has been carefully considered in the construction of the building, and the conveyance of sound to any portion of the auditorium is perfect. The stage is large, roomy and well calculated for scenic effect, and the company engaged is superior to any other organized." The best known members of this company are Messrs. EPH HORN, C. FOX, COOL WHITE, FRANK BROWER, PERCY, ARNOLD, SCHWICARDI and Master EDDY.

Madame ERNESTINE DE VILLIERS' Concert at Dodworth's Hall, last Monday evening, was, perhaps, the best of the successful series she has lately given. It was attended by a large and fashionable audience, and every part of the programme was appreciated, as the excellence of those who performed in it deserved. Madame DE VILLIERS was assisted by Madame D'ANGRI and Signor SBRIGLIA, in vocal solos and duets, and by Messrs. BRANES and DOHLER on the piano. Signor ABELLA acted as conductor. The reputation which Madame DE VILLIERS has acquired as a pianiste was fully sustained on this occasion. She played alone a fantasia by STRAKOSCH, a fantasia by BERTINI, and GOTTSCHALK'S "Tournament Galop;" a grand trio with Messrs. BRANES and DOHLER, and two duets with Mr. DOHLER. All of these were almost faultlessly executed, and were received with hearty applause. It is to be hoped that next season Madame DE VILLIERS will favor her numerous audiences with another series of these very interesting soirées.

THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY.

On the Track of Stonewall Jackson—A Reconnoissance to Luray—Its Success.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HEADQUARTERS IRA HARRIS GUARD, FIFTH NEW-YORK CAVALRY, NEAR FRONT ROYAL, Wednesday, July 2, 1862.

I returned to this point from a reconnoissance in force to Luray, at 1 A. M. of Tuesday last. The force was under command of Gen. CRAWFORD, Third Brigade, Gen. BANKS' corps d'armée, and consisted of Capt. HAMPTON'S Battery, four companies First Vermont Cavalry, the same of the First Michigan and of the First Maine; the Fifth Connecticut Infantry, Tenth Maine Infantry, and Forty-sixth Pennsylvania Infantry. The object of the reconnoissance was to satisfy the General of the whereabouts of JACKSON'S force. The general opinion was that JACKSON was not at that time troubling himself with the now largely augmented force on this line, but that he was giving attention to the state of affairs at or near Richmond. The General, as I have said, desired to fully satisfy himself of the correctness of the general opinion—hence the reconnoissance. We commenced the march from this point (which is about three miles from Front Royal) at daybreak on Sunday morning, passed through Front Royal soon afterward and took the direct road for Luray, arriving at a nameless and uninhabited point, about seven miles from Luray, after nightfall, where we encamped for the night without having seen the shadow of the enemy in uniform. We should have made better time had it not been that it rained copiously all day, rendering the road very muddy and, of course, marching exceedingly difficult. I found it as difficult, probably, as any other man, in consequence of not being used to horseback riding and the peculiar effects of the limestone water, which is the only water to be had in this region. The next morning, at daybreak, the bugle was sounded to prepare for the march, and I found myself too weak to saddle my horse. By the kindness of the General, however, and the attendance of Dr. BURNETT, of the Fifth Connecticut and Dr. RODGERS, of the Forty-sixth Pennsylvania, I was enabled to proceed in a carriage. When the force reached a point about three miles from Luray, the infantry was brought to a halt, and the cavalry, followed by a portion of HAMPTON'S Battery, under command of Col. TOMPKINS, of the First Vermont, sent forward to the town in search of an enemy. When the advance came within sight of the town, four companies of rebel cavalry were discovered within its limits, and a train was seen retiring rapidly. The cavalry was immediately ordered to the gallop march, and, as soon as within charging distance, to charge. The charge was led by Capt. PRESTON, of Company D, First Vermont Regiment, was spirited, and was returned with spirit. Again the rebels were charged, and again they returned it, doubtless more with the intention to delay our advance until their train should escape, than from any hope of finally driving back our superior force. On the next from ours, they skedaddled and were driven from the town. After further reconnoissance had been made, sufficient to satisfy the General that the force seen was the only force within miles, our men returned to the halted force, and soon afterward the column was on its return to the rear of Front Royal, where it arrived at the time named. The loss on our side was one killed and one so badly wounded that it is doubtful whether he will recover. We lost two men taken prisoners, and took two of theirs. The reconnoissance was considered entirely satisfactory.

From the various rumors (we cannot get the New-York papers) the excitement among the troops here, and at Middletown is very great. We have reports of the defeat of Gen. MCCLELLAN at Richmond, and later rumors of the capture of that interesting position by our forces—all of which have increased the expectancy and desire for the presence of the enemy somewhere in this vicinity. Should JACKSON'S forces or any other rebel General's forces make a descent upon us now, they will find a much more imposing force to attend to than they did when JACKSON'S force came down upon Gen. BANKS before. Our troops are enjoying excellent health and anxious for a fight. I think you will hear of important movements here in a very few days, probably before you receive this. The strength of our forces combined is sufficient to important duties, and from present movements, I judge that it is anticipated its strength and activity will soon be required. The Fifth New-York Cavalry, (Ira Harris Guard) Col. O. DE FOREST, has been very much depleted by losses in various actions, and an effort is to be made to fill it up to the standard. The reputation this regiment has earned, for efficiency and gallantry, will, of course, be sufficient to insure the accomplishment of so desirable a result as the present effort. Among the officers detailed for the service in New-York is Capt. J. C. FOSTER, who was so prominent in the rescue of the immense baggage train at Strasburg during the retreat, in the teeth of Gen. JACKSON'S advancing army in front, and ASHBY'S Cavalry in the rear. Among the others are Capt. CREAMER and Lieut. RYDER—both efficient men. J. A.

AFFAIRS IN UTAH.

Joe Morris and His Doings—The Sect to be Suppressed—Emigrants from the East—The Indians.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Thursday, June 12, 1862.

We are still likely to have interesting times in this Valley, on account of the temporal transgressions caused by the spiritual secession of JOE MORRIS and his tribe. He doubtless feels high and lifted up, for it is stated that there have been recently some very grand doings in his village imposing ceremonies, magnificent pageantry, and all that. For be it known that the prophet JOSEPH MORRIS has been anointed, consecrated, and crowned King of something or somebody, with plaudits and rejoicings of no common order among a number of the sons and daughters of Adam out here. So you see there was a meaning in JOE declaring that he and his adherents did not consider themselves subject to any authority represented by United States Chief Justice KINNEY.

The Judge, however, notwithstanding JOE'S great importance, was considerably irritated over the matter, and talked much about magnifying the law. Neighbors, but not disciples, of MORRIS, kept continually importuning the Judge about MORRIS' people taking down fences, and turning cattle into growing grain, and sundry little accidents of that stamp, until the Judge, resolved to act energetically, and as trespass, contempt of court, &c., furnished fresh occasion for legal documents, such were forthcoming, with a requisition on the Governor for a posse to enforce respect to the documents. Accordingly, the Governor has ordered out three or four hundred militia, a small portion of it cavalry. This morning, near that number marched out of this city, with two little field pieces, under Col. R. T. BURTON. But to make the thing sure, it is probable that reinforcements will be mustered in the settlements north, so as to render available a larger force, if necessary, the object evidently being to offer such a strong appearance as shall make resistance useless. The headquarters of the sect will be reached to-night or in the morning, and it is to be hoped that the devotees will listen to the arguments presented, and avoid all unnecessary effusion of blood.

It is currently reported about town that MORRIS is well supplied with small arms, and is not entirely destitute of artillery, as he has for some time been preparing for such an emergency. A kind of common stock prevails among his disciples, which makes it a tolerably good place for the poor. They put in no grain, as this city, according to MORRIS, is shortly to fall into the hands of his faithful.

The practice of artillery, the bristling of small arms, the marching of troops to and fro, and the eager waiting for news, produces a state of things here somewhat in keeping with that in every city and town in the States east of us. It may be that we shall be treated to scenes of carnage, for it is hard to tell what people may do when fighting in the name of their religion. There are some who expect nothing less than a fight, but the more general anticipation is to the contrary. It is commonly understood that MORRIS has instructed his followers to fight if anywhere near equal numbers come up, but if the enemy be evidently overpowering, then the Lord is to be invoked to scatter the persecutors, and a glorious triumph is to be the result. The latter plan is certainly the safest to pursue, and betrays a ground for hope that JOE will be "sensible to the last," and not lead his people in armed array against the law of the land. May be he will "flee to the mountains," and thus lead the authorities a wild-goose chase.

Though the mail comes on so slowly, emigrants from the States are passing through our city on their way to California. Messrs. NOYES and REED, with a company of about thirty, passed through on Tuesday, and another is now in the city. The first company left Omaha, N. T., about the last of April, and let it be noted that this was a week or two after the total stoppage of the overland mail, and the mail is not here yet!

Superintendent DOTY has returned from a visit to the Indians westward. He has left his Secretary, Mr. AMOS REED, at Deep Creek and Ruby Valley, that he may learn more of the Indians, and promote their interest and that of the Government. Mr. DOTY reports the Indians in that section as anxious to learn the arts of peace. The Superintendent has recently furnished the red men of Millard County with sundry plows and other agricultural implements, besides otherwise looking after their welfare.

The silkworms are now busy spinning their little yellow cocoons in various parts of the Territory, and the nursery-men are raising the price of mulberry trees, and propagating them extensively.

Dr. Thompson on Emancipation.

At the Tabernacle, last evening, Rev. Dr. THOMPSON delivered a sermon in favor of Emancipation. The passages of Scripture upon which the discourse was founded are the 22d chapter of Exodus, the 21st verse: "Thou shalt neither vex a stranger nor oppress him; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt;"—and Jeremiah, the 21st chapter and 12th verse: "O, house of David, thus saith the Lord: Execute judgment in the morning, and deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, lest my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings." The graphic account which Mr. THOMPSON gave of his recent visit to the Shenandoah Valley, cannot be reproduced save by himself. It is gratifying to learn from so high a source of the enthusiasm of our troops in the cause in which they are enlisted, and that frightful wounds, and even the near approach of death, cannot stem the ardor of the brave fellows. "And when such men suffer, shall I be silent?" asked the minister of his hearers. Mr. THOMPSON spoke with fervor, and did not forget to pay his respects to the meeting held last week at the Cooper Institute. He was glad to know that Mr. COOPER had not countenanced it, and hoped that he would fumigate his basement. We can deal with traitors in Virginia, said he, but not with these in our midst. A graceful tribute was paid to the energy and wisdom of President LINCOLN, and the sermon closed with a glowing picture of the happiness and prosperity which awaits our country when the war shall have annihilated Slavery.

A collection was taken for the benefit of wounded soldiers. In conclusion, "God Bless Our Native Land" was sung by the choir and congregation.

French Troops to Force their Way to the Mexican Capital.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL NEWS.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Saturday, July 5.

The steamship Hibernian, from Liverpool on the 26th, via Queenstown 27th ult., passed Cape Race at 6 o'clock this morning.

It was asserted that NAPOLEON had resolved to send sufficient reinforcements to Mexico to force his way to the Capital against all obstacles. Admiral GRAVIERE goes out immediately to take command of a strong concentration of French vessels in American waters. The Patrie says the concentration is justified by what may arise out of the American war and the affairs in Mexico.

The steamship Bohemian from Quebec, arrived at Liverpool on the morning of the 25th.

The steamship City of New-York, from New-York, arrived at Queenstown on the afternoon of the 25th and reported only one of her boilers working.

The steamship Hansa which was to have left Southampton on the 25th, was compelled to put back to Bremen, owing to an accident to her machinery.

The proceedings of Parliament on the 25th were unimportant.

The House of Commons was engaged on the bill relative to the Government of the "Inns of Court." The case of EDWIN JAMES was incidentally referred to, and it transpired that he refused even to have friends with him at the investigation of his case, so that it was impossible for him to complain of the secresy of the tribunal which condemned him.

The Morning Herald finds it impossible to account for the inactivity of MCCLELLAN. Possibly, it says, after the battle of Fair Oaks, and the breaking up of BEAUREGARD'S army in the West, he does not see his way clearly, and may feel himself outnumbered by the enemy, in a position which is impregnable, and from which the enemy may fall upon his lines and works at pleasure. If so, he is likely to meet with a disaste which may change the whole aspect of the war, for a reverse to MCCLELLAN involves the ruin of his army and of the hopes of the Federal Government.

A meeting had been held in London relative to the African Slave trade, presided over by Lord BROUGHAM.

FRANCE.

The Corps Legislatif had voted the whole extraordinary budget, and with a slight modification the whole ordinary budget.

The Bourse was heavy. Rentes, 68f. 40c.

The Press, in speaking of the departure of the French Admiral, says his plans have been entirely approved, and his presence will have a favorable result for the solution of the Mexican question. It is asserted that henceforth there is no question of establishing a monarchy in Mexico, or of supporting the candidature of ALMONTE or any other person for the Presidency, but the expedition is simply for protecting the interests of Frenchmen.

ITALY.

M. RATAZZI had given notice of his intention of making the integral appropriation of the clauses in the budget by the Chamber of Deputies a question of confidence in the Ministry.

In response to a question relative to the recent enrollment, M. RATAZZI said the Government were endeavoring to discover the persons who authorized it.

TURKEY.

The special Commissioners dispatched by the Porte to inquire into the recent disturbances at Belgrade had arrived. The Prince of Servia demands the evacuation of all the fortresses.

LATEST NEWS BY THE HIBERNIAN.

LIVERPOOL, Friday, June 27.

The Persia's news is just received.

There have been important debates in the French Corps Legislatif on the Mexican expedition. JULES FAVRE censured the expedition, and recommended the Government to treat with Mexico and withdraw the French troops. M. BILLAULT defended the Government's course, and repudiated the idea of entering upon negotiations where French honor is engaged, and insults must be avenged, and the Mexicans left to choose their own government.

The London Herald maintains that it is time for France and England to take decided action in American affairs.

THE KANGAROO OFF CAPE RACE.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Sunday, July, 6.

The steamship Kangaroo, from Liverpool June 25, via Queenstown, 26th, was boarded off Cape Race at 9 o'clock Saturday night. She experienced a succession of westerly winds. Her advices are not so late as that by the Hibernian, but contain the following items:

The ship Sailors' Home, formerly the Independence, had reached Liverpool, from Havana, with nearly 2,300 bales of cotton.

The London Times comments on the fearful carnage in America, and says never at any time could the map of Europe show so many bloodstained spots. Whatever may be the result, it is plain the war has now reached a point at which it is a scandal to humanity—it has become a war of extermination, yet submission is as far off as ever. The Times does not believe the cry for more bloodshed represents the mind of the American people. Enough blood has been spilt and enough damage done. The opportunity must be present or at hand when some potent American voice, prudently calling "Peace," may awaken an universal echo.

The Times has another editorial on American finances. It says they are in a most critical condition, and ought to produce serious alarm instead of empty boasting and exultation.

The Morning Post charges the American Government with being all along influenced solely by popular clamor, having never pursued an independent course.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH.

The Enemy Preparing to Attack Port Royal—Fort Pulaski to be again Besieged—Gen. Hunter to take the Field—Boat and Gunboat Expeditions to Harass the Coast—First South Carolina Volunteers—Gen. Hunter's Views of Slavery—Actual Condition of the Blacks.

Special Correspondence of the New-York Times.

HILTON HEAD, Wednesday, July 2, 1862.

Something of a flurry was caused here on Monday evening by reports, received from Gen. BRANNAN, that the enemy, in force variously estimated from two thousand to four thousand, had collected at Grahamsville on the mainland, about two miles in the rear of Port Royal Ferry, and were preparing to cross the creek for an attack upon Beaufort. It was understood that Gen. HUNTER immediately made a request to Com. DUPONT that a gunboat should be sent up Broad River and Whale Branch, to operate round Port Royal Island, and destroy any rafts or boats which the enemy might have prepared in the many small creeks and inlets permeating this swampy ground.

An expedition is also about being fitted out, consisting of lifeboats and launches, for the purpose of thoroughly scouring all the shallow waters in the vicinity of Port Royal Island, and destroying any preparations the enemy may be making for an attack. It is believed by some here, that having become aware of the abandonment of James Island, and with it the immediate prospect of an attack upon Charleston, the rebels now seriously contemplate a concentration of their forces in and around Grahamsville, where the creek dividing the island on which our soldiers are stationed from the mainland is narrowest. Acting upon this faith, Gen. HUNTER is reported to be now making preparations for immediately crossing over at Port Royal ferry with such forces as he can collect from those withdrawn from James Island, in order to give the enemy battle before they can fortify Grahamsville, or collect there any such sufficient force as to be seriously threatening. I think, however, from my best means of information, that the affair will end in smoke—the Confederates probably having made this demonstration in order to divert the attention of our troops from their operations looking toward the reduction of Charleston. This view is confirmed by the fact that within the past week strong reconnoitering parties of rebels have penetrated down the Savannah River toward Fort Pulaski and the adjacent islands—one company of the Forty-eighth New-York, on picket duty at Daufuskie, having counted, on Sunday night last, as many as twenty-five camp fires in the direction of our abandoned batteries at Bird and Venus Points.

Of military operations proper we have now an interregnum which will probably continue until the healthy months of the Fall, by which time it is to be hoped that Gen. MCCLELLAN, having got through his operations at Richmond, or Gen. HALLECK sending some few divisions of his army down the Mississippi to New-Orleans, may place at the disposal of the War Department sufficient troops wherewith to undertake active operations from this point. Had the Quartermaster's Department been equal to the emergency of supplying the necessary transportation to Gen. HUNTER, or even returning the various vessels sent North from here, the intended coup de main on Charleston, by way of James Island, would probably have been successful. But every vessel sent to the North, with requisitions even for the supplies most pressingly needed, was immediately absorbed by the Quartermaster's Department and diverted to some other point. This caused great delay in transmitting troops, ordnance, ordnance stores and other requisites, to James Island, and, consequently the Charlestonians had ample time to fortify. BENHAM'S blunder gave them a final advantage, and for the present all designs of taking Charleston or Savannah, or penetrating the country in force to cut the line of railroad between those cities must be abandoned.

Such being the state of facts, Gen. HUNTER, I am informed, is making preparations, in conjunction with the naval forces under Commodore DUPONT, for a series of boat and gunboat expeditions, to harass the whole seacoast of Georgia and South Carolina, seizing every town and village accessible by water communication, and establishing thereat posts which will remain until a superior force of the enemy shall make retreat necessary. In this manner it is hoped that all loyal slaves of rebel masters within our reach may be afforded an opportunity of taking the benefit of the confiscation act, should that much-needed measure receive the sanction of the President. This course will also have the effect of compelling the rebels to keep an army of observation along the coast three or four times outnumbering the strength of Gen. HUNTER'S command; for, with the quick facilities of water transit, 500 men can keep 5,000 busy in guarding any line to which gunboats or ship launches, carrying howitzers, can have access.

As for any rebel demonstrations in the vicinity of Fort Pulaski, they merit little attention—the swampy character of the country, intersected by innumerable creeks, rendering it almost wholly impossible that any ordnance sufficient to reduce the fort should be transported to the banks of Lazaretto Creek from Savannah. The demonstration now being made as if to reconnoitre the works for a second bombardment are doubtless only a part of the scheme for diverting attention from Charleston. Brig.-Gen. ALFRED H. TERRY, of Connecticut, who is in command at Hilton Head and Pulaski, is confident of his abundant ability to repel any such attack with the garrison now under his command.

The health of the troops, with the exception of the numerous slight cases of bilious and remittent fevers which have appeared at James Island, continues to be almost miraculously good. This is doubtless in great measure due to the untiring attention given the subject by Gen. HUNTER, who holds all the medical officers of his command to the strictest performance of their duties. The General Hospital, in which most of those wounded in the engagement of the 16th ult. are now under treatment, is a commodious and well-ventilated building, situated immediately on the shore, and with the cool foam of the breakers giving perpetual freshness to the air. All that care and attention can do for the sufferers is being done, and Gen. HUNTER does not stand very strictly upon the revised army regulations in cases where the health of his command or the comfort of those who have bled for their country is at stake. The patients have fresh beef issued every day, and all who desire are supplied with such delicacies as soup, arrowroot, sago, chickens, eggs and abundant vegetables, not always to be found in the crude administration of our military hospitals. In company with a member of Gen. HUNTER'S Staff, who had been detailed for inspection duty, I visited the hospital, a few days since, and was pleasantly received by Assistant Surgeon J. E. SEMPLE, who has chief charge of the institution. The wards were all cleanly and wholesome, a delightful breeze blowing seaward through the open windows, and the patients, to all appearance, were contented and comfortable as ever men can be who are in sickness and in pain away from home. Speaking to the Adjutant of one of the South Carolina regiments, who had been captured in a skirmish previous to the battle of the 16th ultimo, (the skirmish in which Maj. WRIGHT, of Gen. HUNTER'S Staff, was wounded,) he expressed himself greatly pleased and still more surprised at finding himself so kindly used. Lying under his mosquito net, and with his shattered leg in splints, he very naively confessed that he had looked forward to the usage he would be likely to receive whilst a prisoner in our hands as a calamity worse than death. He receives no more attention and no less than any of the other prisoners, and is doing well. In a short time, he will be able to get about on crutches. Surgeon CHAS. H. CRANE, U. S. A., has been appointed Medical Director of the Department, in place of Surgeon D. J. MCKIERNEN, U. S. V., who has been Acting Medical Director since the removal of Surgeon COOPER. Surgeon CRANE has been a member of Gen. BRENNAN'S Staff, and his familiarity with the forms and routine of the Medical Department, together with his professional skill will make him a valuable officer.

The new orders, in relation to leaves of absence of officers and furloughs to enlisted men are being strictly enforced, but not without much grumbling on the part of those shoulder-strapped gentry who find their plans of cool visits to the Green Mountains of Vermont and Summer bathing at Nahant and Cape May thus suddenly frustrated. It is to be feared, however, that in this, as well as in so many other instances, orders suited to the meridian of Washington will be found to work disastrously in the malarious atmosphere of South Carolina. If applications for leave of absence, or any other applications transmitted to the Adjutant-General, were sure of receiving prompt attention, the evil would be less, but all who know the delays, perhaps unavoidable, of that Department, have a wholesome dread of compelling sick, almost dying men, for whom change of air has been prescribed as the only remedy, to wait until their applications shall have been transmitted to Washington and the answers thereto returned. Under existing orders, however, no alternative but submission is left; and all officers who are interested in Gen. HUNTER'S command will do well to pay special heed to General Orders No. 20, a copy of which I append.

The vexed question of the "the contrabands" has possibly entered a new phase by the appointment of Brig.-Gen. SAXTON to the position of Superintendent of all the plantations and the inhabitants thereof within our army lines. This in effect takes the direct control of the negro population out of Gen. HUNTER'S hands; although as Gen. SAXTON remains subject to Gen. HUNTER'S orders, no very serious change of policy in regard to this class can be adoped without receiving Gen. HUNTER'S sanction. Thus far, Gen. SAXTON has given no indication of any intention to break up the regiment known as the First South Carolina Volunteers, composed of slaves whose masters have run away from them. This experiment, indeed, is one which deserves to be prosecuted to the end. It is thus far the only real protest we have had against that rose-water sentimentalism which refuses to regard treason as the highest crime known to human law—as the "sum of all villainies." Treason, described in our statute books as a felony meriting the worst forms of a felon's death, has been gradually simmered down, by mistaken clemency, into a species of romantic misdemeanor—a kind of political eccentricity—a sort of mistaken patriotic enthusiasm—which has to be gently treated with emollient poultices of courtesy, and gradually brought around to a healthy condition, by plasters of "very distinguished consideration," for those who labor under the worst forms of its virus. In Gen. HUNTER'S view, on the contrary, as evidenced by his course thus far, treason would appear to be a festering and gangrened sore, which must be eradicated from the body politic at any cost, using the knife and the actual cautery if requisite. In his view and in the view of those who think with him, no possible conduct on the part of the North can "exasperate" or inflame the rebels to any greater degree than they are already inflamed. No possible concessions can be made short of acknowledging the success of their conspiracy, which will have no other effect than to convince them of our weakness and establish new claims to their contempt.

Apart from the military employment of the negroes, the success of their organization as free laborers in the Quartermaster's department of the army, and, under the instructions of Secretary CHASE, on the plantations, is one of those astounding new developments which contradict by a few months of practice the received and almost universally accepted opinion of many years. Far from refusing to earn honest wages by the sweat of their brow, far from idling in the sun and devoting themselves to petty theft as a means of livelihood, as prophesied by the enemies of their race and those interested in upholding the "institution," the concurrent testimony of all who have had the supervision of the colored men in this Department proclaims an opposite result. Employed by Gen. SHERMAN in the Quartermaster's Department at $8 a month and rations, their services have been so valuable and so eagerly sought in all their branches of business, that it has been found necessary in both the Comissary and Quartermaster's Departments to advance their pay to $12 a month in order to retain them.

Few who, eight months since, saw the crouching, slouching, abject, only half human figures which Slavery had made of this race of helots, would recognize to-day as the same men the well-clad, elastic, intelligent and respectful colored laborers who crowd the busy piers of Hilton Head and Beaufort, handling packages and barrels with the brisk dexterity of Northern stevedores and lightermen, driving wagons to the depôt storehouses, or heartily rowing boats with the precision of men-of-war's men. They have learned to talk, also, and I hear from their school-teachers, and my personal observation bears out the assertion, that most of them will be able to read and a large portion be able to write, before the expiration of many months.

Thus far, in its civil and military aspects, the management of the negroes in this Department presents phases deserving the most serious attention of the philanthropist and the statesman, and an earnest hope must be felt by all interested in the suppression of this rebellion and the welfare of the human race that the prosecution to its logical result of this sudden attempt to elevate a whole people may not be interrupted.

What Did the Ocean Queen Come For?—No News—Where the Troops Might be Made Available.

HILTON HEAD, Monday Evening, June 30, 1862.

I have just ascertained that the steamship Ocean Queen will leave here at daybreak for New-York, but I have nothing in the way of news to send you. The Ocean Queen arrived here last evening, with orders to report to the Chief Quartermaster, but wherefore is a mystery to that functionary and all the other officials. It is true, that before the defeat at James Island there was pressing need of the means of transportation, but such a hulk as the Ocean Queen would have been valueless, as light draft vessels only could have been made available. The Ocean Queen brought no cargo and no troops, and her arrival is looked upon as the result of an idiosyncracy on the part of the Quartermaster at New-York.

There were several vessels in this evening from Stono with troops, and in a few days our forces in that locality will all have been withdrawn. I am not alone in thinking that the withdrawal of all the troops from James Island is unwise. Our foothold there, with the aid of the gunboats, could easily be maintained during the Summer, and when the Fall campaign opened, we would have our base of operations within five miles of Charleston. The high lands on the island adjoining James Island are healthier far than this place, and nothing could prevent our keeping possession of them, if we chose. Now, to regain the position, we will have to fight for it.

I have just heard that the enemy were appearing in force at Port Royal ferry. I don't know whether the report is true. There is nothing in the way of their irruption, and it would be an easy matter for them to drive off the small force (two regiments) which we have on the island.

As there are to be no active operations here this Summer, why not send all the forces of this department (save sufficient to garrison our fortifications,) up to reinforce MCCLELLAN? Five thousand would be sufficient for the purposes of this department, and 8,000 or 10,000 could be spared, with advantage to all concerned.

Naval.

The United States sailing frigate Sabine, 50 guns, left the Brooklyn Navy-yard on Saturday for Newport, and other places, to fill up her crew. She has been in commission for some months, and was ordered to Fortress Monroe some time since, but her crew being wanted for steamers, she had to remain here. We have twice printed a list of her officers.

The United States steam corvette Mohican, 10 guns, arrived at Philadelphia on Saturday from the Gulf. The Mohican has just completed her first cruise, which began on the Coast of Africa three years ago. She captured the Erie, with 900 negroes on board; and after her return participated gallantly in the attack on Hilton Head. Her crew will be discharged and paid off, and her officers relieved. The Mohican was built at Portsmouth, and is the second best ship of her class in the navy.

A VICTORY IN MISSISSIPPI.

A Large Body of Rebel Cavalry Defeated Near Booneville.

CORINTH, Miss., Sunday, July 6.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

Official reports are just received of a brilliant affair of our cavalry, near Booneville, Miss., on the 1st inst. Col. SHERIDAN, of the Second Michigan Cavalry, with two regiments of 728 men, were attacked by parts of eight regiments, numbering some 4,700 men, which he defeated and drove back, after seven hours' hard fighting. Our loss was 44 killed, wounded and missing; that of the enemy must have been very great, as they left 65 dead on the field. Official reports will be forwarded by mail. I respectfully recommend Col. SHERIDAN for promotion for gallant conduct in battle.

H. W. HALLECK, Major-General.

THE NEW CALL FOR TROOPS.

The Necessity for Immediate Action.

FELLOW CITIZENS: The call of the President for 300,000 more volunteer troops, seconded by our Governor in accepting the quota of 50,000 for this State, would seem to impose a special duty upon every loyal and patriotic citizen. In view of the present condition of public affairs, and the absolute need of this immediate increase of the army, is it not obligatory upon every man to inquire and determine whether he has done his part to uphold and sustain our excellent Government?—his part towards putting down the most impious conspiracy and atrocious rebellion the world ever saw?

It seems to me that it is not optional with us to go or stay, as may be agreeable to our feelings; to surrender or withhold our sons, as may suit our whims or pleasures. The call of our country is the mandate of God! Woe to the man "who resisteth the power and resisteth the ordinance of God."

But if age, or infirmities, or the necessities of a family, detain the father at home, are there not many young men who, impelled by the exigencies of the country, would promptly and nobly respond to this urgent demand were they not kept back by the cupidity, or fear, or unreasoning and inconsistent restraints of parental authority? Are there not many Christian parents, even, who are thus obstructing the important measures of the Government, defeating the honorable and patriotic aspirations of their sons, and, alas! subjecting to extremest jeopardy all our dearest rights and privileges, all the best and most hopeful interests of our posterity?

Having early in this war consecrated two out of four of my own dear sons eligible to military duty, and conscientiously offered them up to the sacred cause—one of whom fell gloriously at his post of duty, in the service—I deem myself at liberty to make this appeal to the many families who have not yet had a representative in the field. My other two sons shall not be withheld if it becomes necessary for me to increase my quota; and if foreign Governments should consummate the audacity of threatened interference, I pledge myself also for the righteous service, if required.

Let every one consider his responsibility in this crisis, and yield without delay to the convictions of conscience! Let our noble President see, and our gallant Generals know, that every man is ready and anxious to do his duty! Let it be understood by every member of the Government and Congress, yea, by every man, woman and intelligent child throughout the land that the verdict of the people in response to the charge of Jehovah is, that the rebellion is to be crushed out—to be extinguished root and branch! that we resolutely devote our hearts, and hands, and purses, and lives to this work! that we will not think of or for one moment listen to any compromise in any form or at any time coming from any quarter or power.

In the Providence of God a momentous responsibility rests upon this nation—the Northern States—at this time; but with the fearful responsibility God has connected the highest honors.

Let us not ignominiously shrink from the former, or basely forfeit the glory of the latter! W. P. L.

How Every Man may be of Service.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The President calls for 300,000 volunteers, and the country and cause need them. Every man can do something toward answering this call. There are hundreds of men would go if it were not for dependent families. Many who are in good circumstances cannot go for other reasons. I suggest that every man who is able take a particular family to look after, and assist and even add to the pay of the husband while absent on duty. We at the North are not yet made to feel the burden of war—the well-to-do in life especially. Let us all deny ourselves to help on the contest. The cause is just, and if we do our duty God will make the result glorious to our country. I met a lady yesterday in the cars, just returning from New-York, where she had been to purchase a new dress. On hearing the intelligence from MCCLELLAN'S army she abandoned the purpose, and resolved to devote the amount of her intended purchase to aid the soldiers and their families. In imitation of the same spirit, I have consecrated and set apart the ordinary sum expended by myself on the 4th, for pleasure, to the same purpose—

For God, our Country, and Liberty.

Yours, E. H. B.

The Response of Maine.

PORTLAND, Me., Sunday, July 6.

Gov. WASHBURNE has issued a proclamation calling additional troops, saying that general orders will be issued immediately giving authority for raising regiments of infantry, and for calling to service a portion of the ununiformed militia.

The Response of Pennsylvania.

HARRISBURGH, Friday, July 4.

The following proclamation was issued by the Governor to-day:

Pennsylvania ss.—In the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, ANDREW G. CURTIN, Governor of the said Commonwealth,

A PROCLAMATION

More men are required for the suppression of the rebellion. Our regiments in the field are to be recruited to their original strength, and in addition new regiments are to be formed.

Pennsylvania has hitherto done her duty to the country. Her freemen are again called on to volunteer in her defence, that the blood of her sons who have already fallen may not have been shed in vain, and that we may hand down to our posterity the blessings of union and civil and political liberty which we derived from our fathers.

The number of men now required, and the regulations for enlistment, will be made known forthwith in General Orders. Meanwhile, the men of Pennsylvania will hold themselves in readiness for prompt compliance with the necessary demand upon their gallant and patriotic spirit.

Our noble Commonwealth has never yet faltered, and must stand firm now when her honor and everything that is dear to her are at stake.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at Harrisburgh, this Fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, and of the Commonwealth the eighty-seventh. By the Governor.

ELI SLIFER, Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Provision for Sick and Wounded Soldiers in the Country.

At a meeting held in the Baptist Church, Owego, Tioga County, N.Y., July 4, 1862, the following Committee was named by the Ministers of the Gospel present, to act with the Sanitary Commission of New-York City, viz.: Hon. John M. Parker, Hon. H. L. Bean, Wm. P. Stone, F. E. Platt, F. L. Jones, Geo. Truman, F. H. Pumpelly, Hon. Thomas Farrington, Jas. S. Thurston, Sylvanus Fox, Thos. C. Platt, C. A. Winthrop, W. L. Hoskins, Wm. Smyth. In addition to the above, the clergymen and physicians of the village are ex-officio members of the Committee. The Committee having met at the office of Judge FARRINGTON, on the afternoon of the same day, organized by electing Hon. JOHN M. PARKER Chairman, WM. SMYTH Recording Secretary, and JAMES S. THURSTON Corresponding Secretary. The purposes intended by the formation of this Committee were informally discussed for a short time, when Hon. H. L. BEAN, President of the village, moved the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That our Corresponding Secretary tender our services to our Government, through the Sanitary Commission of New-York City, in care of sick and wounded soldiers; and that we pledge ourselves, if the Government will forward to Owego one hundred soldiers, together with hospital furniture, including only cots and mattresses, that we will provide them with suitable food, care and medical attendance, free of charge to the Government.

On motion the Secretary was ordered to furnish copies of the proceedings of this Committee to the TIMES, Tribune and World papers, of New-York City.

JOHN M. PARKER, Chairman.

WM. SMITH, Secretary.

J. S. THURSTON, Corresponding Secretary.

The New Tariff—Effect on Bonded Goods.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A communication in this morning's Herald justifying the provision in the bill subjecting goods that may be in bond to the increased duty, must have been written by a party who has a personal interest in favoring a provision so grossly violating good faith.

It is not true that the value of goods on hand is enhanced to the amount of the proposed increase of duty, but it is true that but few goods, paying the present rate of duty, can now be sold to nett cost. A large amount of goods are now on hand, under the old duty of 30 per cent., for which the cost cannot be realized, and to put an additional duty upon such property, or compel the owner to sell at such price as the Herald's correspondent and others may choose to pay, is too gross an outrage for honest men to justify.

When the Government receives the importer's bond at three months or three years, the conditions ought to be faithfully observed.

It is true the importer will have to submit to the new Tariff bill, no matter how unjust its provisions; he will have to sacrifice his property to raise the money to purchase demand notes at 5 to 10 per cent. premium, to pay the duty before the period stated in his bond; failing in this, as many importers will, he will have to pay the increased duty—it is true, that after a five years' lawsuit he may recover the difference between the duty he ought to have paid, and that which he is compelled to pay, by the Government he has so faithfully aided in its hour of need.

Increased duty upon goods in bond and on board ship when the bill takes effect, on the 1st of August, will greatly benefit the speculators in demand notes and gold, and will put a few millions of dollars in the treasury a month or two earlier than under the old-fashioned honest policy of the Government, which carefully avoided subjecting goods in bond or on board ship to increased duty.

I have not a word to urge against increasing the duty upon foreign goods. The good of the country requires an increase, and it is strange that no increase is proposed on wines and silks; but I do hope the Government of the United States will not violate good faith, merely because some importer may obtain higher prices for his goods, without being compelled to buy demand notes or gold from speculators.

Importers need not fear that the Senate will sanction any bill subjecting goods in bond or on board ship to the increased duty.

Papers publishing, without comment, communications so unjust to the mercantile community, do their advertisers injustice, and who are quite as patriotic as the consumer, who imagines he does more to support the Government than the banker and merchant.

REVENUE.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, July 3, 1862.

News from San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Tuesday, July 1.

The steamer Pacific brings news from British Columbia to the 27th and from Oregon to the 25th of June, and about $65,000 in gold.

Both the Cariboo and Salmon River mines appear to be over-crowded.

Thousands of adventurers are scattered over a hitherto unexplored country, searching for new mining grounds and meeting many discouragements. Much suffering is anticipated. Emigration northward is considerably reduced by unfavorable and conflicting accounts. The very considerable arrivals of gold at Portland and Victoria, however, furnish positive testimony of the existence of some gold diggings.

Sailed, to-day, steamer St. Louis, for Panama, with 135 passengers, and also with $870,000 in treasure for New-York, and $390,000 for England.
